Assembly for State Dry Law Repeal

HOUSE SHOWS 84 MAJORITY IN FAVOR OF WETS

Prohibition's Foes Lead in Senate.

Enactment by both houses of the next legislature of a bill to repeal the Illinois prohibition law appeared even more certain yesterday when 84 members of the new house of representatives, seven more than required for a majority, indicated they would support the repeal measure.

On Friday a poll of the new state senate showed that the upper chamber of the legislature for the first time is in favor of repeal. Twenty-six senators, a majority, indicated they would vote against the prohibition law, nominally the search and seizure act. The house in two previous sessions has passed the Weber-O'Grady repeal bill.

What the Poll Shows.

The increased anti-prohibition majority in the next house was revealed by a poll of the state representatives by THE TRIBUNE. Two questions were asked the law makers: "Will you abide by the referendum vote in your district?" and "Will you vote for repeal of the state prohibition law?"

Of the 153 members elected last Tuesday it was disclosed that 56 representatives who had voted for the Weber-O'Grady bill in 1929 were elected, and that 26 new members have been elected on platforms or pledges of repeal. In addition, two new members who had not voted on the bill last year but who now declare they will vote for such a measure were also reelected.

This gives the next house an indicated favorable vote on repeal of 84, instead of 77, which was sufficient to pass the measure in the house last year.

Nine Wet Allies Expected.

The alignment in the senate also is expected to become stronger for repeal by the time the final official returns on the state prohibition referendum are made known, because several senators who in past sessions opposed repeal now face the fact that their districts gave a majority vote in favor of repeal in the referendum.

In this category of senators there are 15, and the wet leaders have expressed confidence that from among these 15 there will be a few, at least, who will respect the majority sentiment of their constituents as shown by the referendum.

The repeal leaders point out, however, that even without any additional strength from these 15 senators a majority of 26 of the 51 senators already is assured as shown by the poll.

WHAT BRINGS OUT THE BEST QUALITIES IN A NATION?

Excessive Prosperity?

Or Hard Times?

FATHER OFFERS BRILL $1,000 A TOUCHDOWN, SO MARTY MAKES 3

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Martin Brill's gala afternoon for Notre Dame against his former teammates of Pennsylvania turned out to be a costly entertainment for his father, J. Edward Brill of Norwood, who is connected with the J. G. Brill company, manufacturers of street cars and trucks.

Some weeks ago Brill's father wrote to the right half back, offering him $1,000 for each touchdown he scored against Pennsylvania. Marty himself revealed this after the game.

The results were costly and surprising. In the first period Marty ran 67 yards through the whole Pennsylvania team for a touchdown. He made two more later.

Mr. and Mrs. Brill, sitting in box F beheld the performance of the boy who had left Penn because he could not make the team. The father's expression of joy didn't indicate any great suffering at the prospective payment of $3,000.

"But I don't think father expected me to win all that money," said young Brill. "I don't know whether I'll collect all of it or not."

He insisted it was the work of his teammates that made his own showing possible.

"All you had to do was to run and hold the ball," he said. "Any one could score touchdowns with a club like ours behind him."

QUINCY NATIONAL BANK FAILS TO OPEN ITS DOORS

Quincy, Ill., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—The Quincy-Ricker National bank failed to open its doors here this evening as usual. A federal reserve bank official is in charge.

The bank, the only national depository in Quincy and Adams county, has deposits of $4,000,000, assets of $5,800,000, and resources $4,500,000. Joseph Thomas is president.

About eight years ago the Ricker National bank failed. The Quincy National bank, a smaller institution, took over the Ricker bank and reorganized under the name "Quincy - Ricker National."

Trap Extortion Novice in His $20,000 Plot

Harry E. Price, novice extortionist, was trapped yesterday as he planned to carry out his plot to obtain $20,000 from Carl Kreitzer, cashier of the Bank of Ellsworth. Ellsworth is a town near Bloomington.

Gorge Williams, investigator on the staff of Pat Roche, chief investigator for State's Attorney Swanson, seized Price at Archer avenue and Halsted street.

The prisoner, who is 23 years old and lives at the Lorraine hotel, 411 South Wabash avenue, had written seven letters and sent two telegrams to Kreitzer, all demanding the payment of large sums under threat of harm to the banker and his wife and daughter.

Traces Sender of Telegram.

The last telegram was sent from Chicago yesterday. Investigator Williams learned that it had been filed at a telegraph office adjoining the Lorraine hotel, and after questioning the employes of the telegraph office Williams found a young man who had accepted the telegram and who said he could identify the man who had presented it.

The telegram said that Kreitzer should follow through on the plan previously proposed, which was that he should bring $20,000 in small bills, taking a Chicago and Alton train arriving at the Halsted street station at 3:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and that he should walk south in Halsted street until he was stopped.

Investigator Williams, with operatives of the Pinkerton Detective agency, who had been called in on the case, and with the telegraph office employé, took position near the station.

Price Arrives; Is Seized.

The man later found to be Price arrived at Archer avenue and Halsted street shortly before the train arrived and went into a drug store. The witness from the telegraph office told Williams that he believed this was the man who had presented the telegram, and Price was seized.

He was armed with a .32 caliber revolver. He had arrived on the scene in an automobile, which was driven by W. H. Moeller, 7017 Kimbark avenue, but Investigator Roche, after questioning both men, absolved Moeller and ordered him released.

Price at first denied his guilt, but after questioning said that he had written the threatening letters in a hope of obtaining money to help his father, a farmer living near Ellsworth, who maintains an account in Kreitzer's bank. Kreitzer, on viewing the prisoner, recalled him as a youth he knew in the Ellsworth High school several years ago, when Kreitzer was a member of the board of education.

Roche Called Into Case.

Roche was asked to take charge of the case by R. C. Saunders of the Illinois Bankers' association, to which Kreitzer had appealed for assistance.

One of the letters sent by Price said in part:

"Did you read in the papers about Joe Aiello and how many bullet holes in him? Well, if you don't show up Tuesday you will look the same."

Another letter discussed the case of Earl L. Yocum, the Galva banker who was kidnaped, and threatened the same treatment for Kreitzer.

Dog Dies of Grief Over Death of Young Master

LONDON, Nov. 8.—That animals are overcome by brief even to death was borne out in Radstock, Somerset. Kenneth Horler, a young schoolboy, fell from his bicycle and died in the street. His inseparable companion, Bubbles, a little black and tan terrior, was heart broken. After visiting the boy's grave Bubbles stretched himself out on the hearth rug in front of the fire, gave several faint sobs and died.

80,000 LISTED IN CITY CENSUS OF UNEMPLOYED

Only 24,000 Claim Urgent Need.

Hoover Plans Action

President Hoover will ask congress for emergency appropriations to speed up public works already authorized but for which only a portion of the cost has been authorized, in the interests of the unemployed. Details on page 3.

Between 20,000 and 25,000 persons of various stations in life were registered yesterday at an orderly and efficient census of Chicago's unemployed, ordered by Gov. Emmerson's unemployment commission as the first step in the program of emergency aid for the jobless this winter.

The registration was held at the 352 public schools of the city and at the downtown offices of the board of education, which were open from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. Some 7,000 principals, teachers, engineers, and janitors of the public school system gave up their Saturday holiday to conduct the census of the unemployed.

At 3 p. m., with all but thirty of the schools reporting their approximate totals, a count of registration cards was begun. The count revealed a registration of 75,218 cases up to 3 o'clock, a figure which the commission expected would be increased by approximately 10 per cent in the final totals.

23,900 Ask for Help.

Registration cards were sorted into two classes, the first of cases requiring emergency relief and the second of those merely seeking employment. In the first category were 23,921 cases, all of persons claiming immediate need of food, clothing or shelter.

It was expected that investigation of individual cases would reduce the number of needy cases considerably, the theory being that many would be found less needy than represented and others entirely unworthy. No estimate was available on the percentage of registrants to be classified as transients.

Heaviest in Downtown District.

Registration was heaviest in the downtown district and at Negro schools on the south side. At the board of education headquarters in the Steuben club, 188 West Washington street, 1,300 persons registered while at the board's other office, 480 South State street, the total was nearly 1,200.

The unemployed stood in ranks four abreast at both these offices and the staff of teacher clerks proved inadequate. It was this situation, apparently, which led officials of the board early in the afternoon to estimate the expected total registration at 200,000 an estimate subsequently reduced by more than half.

Expect Final Figures Tomorrow.

Final registration figures will probably be available tomorrow evening, according to Frederick J. Lane, assistant superintendent of schools, who was placed in charge of the work. On a tentative survey of the registration last night, members of the governor's commission expressed the conviction that the figures would accurately portray the present condition of the city's unemployed.

In other cities where registration has been tried, the result has not always been accurate, it was said. In New York for example, a registration brought in only 36,000 names of unemployed, a total believed to be but

200 Shoppers in Panic in Store Holdup

In downtown Maywood last night, 200 customers, mostly women with children, were milling about the bargain counters of Lando brothers' dry-goods store, 19 North 5th avenue, when a man with two revolvers appeared at the front door and shouted:

"This is a stickup; everybody hoist their hands."

At the same moment, another bandit who had taken his position in the center of the store by the cash register, pointed a gun at Ely Lando, 50 years old, one of the proprietors, and said:

"Gimme the jack."

Girl Grabs at Bandit.

Mr. Lando hesitated and the robber struck him over the head and in the face with the butt of the gun. Then he ransacked the till of $150. By now the store was in pandemonium. Several customers had fainted and children were crying. The bandit at the door had fled. Miss Lilian Zimmerman of River Forest, a ribbon clerk, leaped at Mr. Lando's assailant and grabbed him around the neck. He started running after pushing her aside.

A taxicab, driven by Ben Exx, 44 years old, of Villa Park, waited at the curb. In it were two women. The robber leaped in this cab and firing his gun through the windshield, ordered Exx to "step on it." The cab sped over to Lake street, east to 4th avenue and to Main street, with the robber continuing to fire through the windshield.

Police Car Overtakes Cab.

Chief of Police Robert H. Bailey, Sergt. E. C. Seidman and Patrolmen J. A. McDonald and Harry Mueller, in a squad car, overtook the cab at Main street and 2d avenue.

The bandit, his ammunition gone, surrendered without a struggle. He said he was George Wolf, 26 years old, 1616 Jackson boulevard, Chicago. Chief Bailey says he has a criminal record and uses the alias of John Morgan. The two women with him said they were Louise Sexton, 21 years old, and Lilian Johnson, 16 years old. They refused to give the police any addresses.

FIRST WIRELESS STATION IN U. S. TO BE AN EXHIBIT

New York, Nov. 8.—(AP)—A homely little shack on Long Island, identified as the first commercial wireless station built in America by Marconi, is to be preserved as a historical exhibit.

Announcement was made today that through the efforts of Maj. Edwin H. Armstrong, radio pioneer and inventor, the building will take its place as an important landmark in the development of the industry.

Information available places the time of the erection of the structure in the late fall of 1900 or the early winter of 1901. This gives it a date in radio history prior to Marconi's experiments in transocean communication.

Marconi located his station on the outskirts of Babylon, Long Island. There he put up a tall wooden pole as the antenna mast, sank a large zinc ring into the earth for a ground connection, and began communication with vessels as far as 60 miles at sea.

De Molay Starts Movement to Get Youths Home Early

Kansas City, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Seeking to relieve parental anxiety, the order of De Molay tonight announced the beginning of a nation-wide movement advocating the ending at midnight of all dances hereafter sponsored by its chapters and other organizations of youths. All of the De Molay chapters in more than 1,300 cities will be asked to comply with the request made by Frank S. Land, founder and head of the international organization for boys between 16 and 21 years old.

MESSAGE BEARS TRAGIC END OF CLASS ROMANCE

Friends Recall Love Test in Jungle.

Out of the Brazilian jungle yesterday came a story of Chicago romance. And with it came the report that this romance, fostered and kept alive through years of wilderness peril, has been wiped out in the swift tragedy of massacre by savages—a tragedy paralleling in drama the lives and deaths of the early missionaries who braved the wild Indian tribes of the great lakes region 300 years ago.

In their lonely mission station, five hundred miles from a railroad, thousands of miles from home and friends, lived the Rev. Arthur F. Tylee, 34 years old, a graduate of the Moody Bible institute of Chicago; his wife, Ethel, also a graduate of the institute, and their daughter, Marion, 2½ years old.

With them was Miss Mildred Kratz, 30 years old, the daughter of Mrs. M. F. Hollingsworth of 1013 Wheaton avenue, Wheaton, a graduate of the Moody institute and a graduate nurse of the Augustana hospital nurses' school.

Message Tells of Massacre.

Yesterday afternoon the Rev. D. L. Foster, superintendent of the men students at Moody Bible institute, received a telegram from the headquarters of the Inland South American Missionary union in New York stating that "the Rev. Mr. Tylee, his baby, and Miss Kratz had been killed by Indians. Mrs. Tylee was seriously wounded by the savages, but she had been rescued and had a chance to recover."

For a time some doubt was cast on the fate of the missionary party last evening when Dr. Kenneth MacKenzie, president of the missionary union, was quoted in New York dispatches as saying he had received information that Mr. Tylee and his baby had been killed in an automobile accident in Brazil. It was learned, however, that the cablegram had been read to Dr. MacKenzie over the phone at Westport, Conn. Dr. MacKenzie said he probably had misunderstood the message.

"If the dispatch said our people was massacred, it was undoubtedly correct," Dr. MacKenzie stated.

Open Mission Settlement.

From missionary society officials it was learned last night that under the direction of the missionary union the Tylees had established a mission settlement among the savages of the state of Matto Grosso, Brazil, in a mountainous forest country 2,000 miles inland from the Atlantic coast of Brazil and near the Bolivian border.

There for the last five years—ever since a two year test of their affections in the wilderness had shown that they were mates—they had ministered to the Indians, a race swept by recurrent epidemics of disease and as uncivilized as it was in the days of the Spanish conquistadores.

Indians Massacre Missionaries.

But within the last two weeks the Indians revolted. Recently decimated by an epidemic, they are believed to have been told by their medicine men, ancient tribal leaders, that the white missionaries were to blame for the disease. They rose against the Tylees. There was short, swift execution with knives, clubs and keen edged machetes, and when it was over the Rev. Mr. Tylee, his baby daughter and Miss Kratz lay dead and Mrs. Tylee was wounded.

The tragic news was conveyed last night by Mr. Foster of Moody institute to the Rev. W. W. Iliff, pastor of St. Paul's Evangelical Union church, 9254 South Winchester avenue, whose church is paying the salaries of the missionaries under the auspices of the Missionary union. Friends of the Tylees were notified and they recalled the romance that sent the missionary and his wife into the jungle.

Story of Their Romance.

The story begins seven years ago at the Moody Bible institute. It was in 1923 that Mr. Tylee, a native of Worcester, Mass., and his fiancée, Miss Ethel Canary, whose home was in Memphis, were graduated at the institute.

They agreed to test their love. The test was to be missionary work in far off Brazil. They were to spend two years working among the Indians at different stations in the jungle. If at the end of that time both were of the same mind they were to be married.

Tylee was a Baptist and Miss Canary a member of the Presbyterian church, and this complicated the situation, the young couple said, but they thought that time would resolve it

STEADY BUYING STEADIES BUSINESS

"Normal buying by those with a steady income will steady business and cut unemployment. Hoarding of idle money does no one any good. Commodity prices are down. The cost of living is less. Normal buying now for normal needs should be the deliberate program of all who are able."

CHICAGO MISSIONARIES REPORTED MASSACRED BY INDIANS IN BRAZILIAN JUNGLE

difficulties. They departed from Chicago for Brazil in March of 1923.

The two trial years passed, the experiment was a success, and the Rev. Mr. Tylee and Miss Canary were married in June, 1925, at Corumba, the principal commercial city of the state of Matto Grosso. They struck out again into the wilderness to establish their mission, 500 miles northwest of Cuyaba, the capital of the state.

Their station was in the Cordillera mountain range. The roads are trails, passable only by mule team, and much of the travel is by boat along the rivers that traverse the region. Dense forests cover the land, with occasional clearings. In English Matto Grosso means "great woods."

The area of the state is about 370,000 square miles, ten times the area of Illinois, and its population is approximately 312,000, one-tenth of the population of Chicago. The inhabitants of the country outside the principal towns are chiefly savages living in the most primitive state, swayed by superstition and under the influence of their medicine men.

In Chicago on Leave.

It was in this setting that the Tylees set up their mission and sought to educate the Indians and relieve them from the heavy toll of epidemics. Slightly more than a year ago the minister and his wife returned to Chicago on furlough. Here they met Miss Kratz and arranged to take her back to Brazil with them as a nursing assistant.

All three returned to the mission in the early fall, taking with them the baby, Marian, who had been born in the settlement and had made the trip to the United States with her parents.

Blame Indians' Fear of "Magic."

Details of the massacre were lacking last night, but friends and relatives of the missionaries said they had been fearful of an uprising because of the incidents related in letters received from the Tylees and Miss Kratz.

Mrs. Hollingsworth, mother of Miss Kratz, said her daughter had recently written her that trouble with the Indians was brewing as the result of the deaths of several members of a tribe in an epidemic which the savages attributed to the "magic" made by the white people.

This possible explanation of the uprising was also given by Mrs. Willis D. Bowen, 9534 Longwood drive, a friend of the Tylees and the namesake of their daughter, Marian.

Told of Other Killings.

Mr. Foster of the Moody Bible institute said he had been informed in letters that the savages in the neighborhood of the Tylee mission had recently killed several telegraph linemen who were attempting to string wires through the jungle.

Mr. Foster said that the Tylee mission was under the direction of the missionary union.

The Rev. Ronald Kratz, pastor of the Western Springs Baptist church, is a brother of Miss Kratz. He also was a friend of the Rev. Mr. Tylee at the Moody institute.

The Rev. Mr. Kratz said Mr. Tylee was a graduate of Amherst college and had also studied law at Harvard university and the University of Paris. Miss Kratz, besides attending the Moody institute and the Augustana hospital nurses' school, was also a graduate of Coe college.

The Rev. Arthur F. Tylee, his wife, Ethel, and their daughter, Marian, who were attacked by Indians in Brazil. The father and child were killed and the mother seriously injured, according to reports.

Former Head of Erie Road Sued by Son's Ex-Fiancee

New York, Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Frederick D. Underwood, former president of the Erie railroad and a nationally known financier, was sued today for $100,000 by the one time fiancée of his son, Russell Sage Undergood, on a charge that he had conspired to blacken the girl's name. The son, prominent in New York society, was made a co-defendant in the action, as well as H. A. Rohr.

DO-X Passengers Ordered Ready for Hop Early Today

[Copyright: 1930: By the New York Times.]

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 8.—All passengers of the giant German flying boat DO-X were ordered to be in readiness for embarking orders between 8 and 9 a. m., tomorrow, for the flight to England en route to America. The weather tonight is clear and calm, but another storm was reported over Ireland, moving eastward. If it moves slowly enough it will be possible to fly early Sunday; if more rapidly, then the next belt of good weather is scheduled for Monday.

PURSUE CHINA BANDITS

BY CHARLES DAILEY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PEIPING, China, Nov. 8.—The Rev. Bert T. Nelson of Minneapolis and the Rev. Christopher N. Tvedt, a Norwegian, who were captured south of Loshan, are reported to be enduring severe hardships with other unidentified foreign captives. In the Hankow consular district 21 foreigners are still held captive.

The Rev. Mr. Nelson and the Rev. Mr. Tvedt are held at the hamlet of Banhsientien which is located in the mountainous country on the northern border of the Hupeh province. Troops have been sent in pursuit and are reported to have arrived at Loshan beyond which the roads are exceedingly difficult for military forces to travel.

Banditry is fast increasing in all sections of China. In the Peiping district following a murder at a hunting park, bandits raided a settlement and sacked a chapel immediately outside of the Peiping south gate. Many were wounded. Among those hurt are three merchants who were brought to the Rockefeller hospital here.

Foreigners have been warned not to pass the city gates. Owing to pressure on the part of the American legation, Manchurian cavalry forces have started patrolling the principal roads to foreign cottages.

When the wives of Admiral McVay and of Capt. Dillon, who is chief of staff, visited the summer palace by motor recently, they were escorted by another motor containing four marines of the legation guard, who were armed with a machine gun.

Twenty-five per cent of the supertax on all foreign machine made goods imported at the north Chinese ports has been canceled by the Manchurian occupational government, but some of the Peiping local taxes, ordered canceled by the Nanking government, are still being collected. Among these is an assessment of 20 per cent on the retail price of all commodities, including those of Chinese origin.

AN AIRPLANE AND SOME FIRECRACKERS WIN THIS LATIN WAR

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 8.—(AP)—A tale of winning an engagement in the Dominican republic revolution last February with an airplane and home made firecrackers was told here today by Willard S. Wade, aerial adventurer, following his arrival on a steamer from the Caribbean.

A world war flyer, Wade was the entire aerial expeditionary force for Gen. Rafael Trujillo in his coup d'état last February, he said. The enemy having been located in the mountains, Wade flew over their bivouacs, he related, dropped large home made cannon crackers, and the next day the lowlands swarmed with conciliatory foes. There were no casualties.

No Secret Hel
A simple explanation of great success

A well known author is writing a story about A&P. "What," he has asked repeatedly, "is the secret of A&P's success? Why is it the largest grocer in the world?"

At first he was disappointed and puzzled. For he found no secret, no key to success. He had expected to solve a mystery, to discover a magic formula. He found, simply, an organization of wide-awake men hard at work.

After a few weeks' study, he has forgotten all about secrets of success, and he is no longer puzzled. But he is amazed at how much can be accomplished when great numbers of men work together with a common purpose. His will not be a new story. Real success comes only to those who believe in what they're doing—and do it.

All A&P men believe that good food should be sold at low prices—and you'd be surprised to know how simple it is when they all work together.

HOOVER TO SEEK FUNDS FOR MORE FEDERAL WORKS

Unemployment Emergency His Objective.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—President Hoover announced today that an emergency appropriation to finance a further expansion of the government's public works construction program for the relief of unemployment would be asked of congress as soon as it convenes in December. The amount of the appropriation, expected to exceed 100 million dollars, has not yet been determined.

According to an announcement made at the White House following executive conferences between the President, cabinet members, and Col. J. C. Roop, budget director, the emergency appropriation will be applied to the further intensification of public works. Public buildings and other forms of federal construction already authorized by congress but for which appropriation normally would have been delayed until some future date. The President will also recommend that provision be made for "seed loan" assistance to farmers in the drought areas.

List of Projects Called.

The President's decision to expedite the federal building program was foreshadowed several days ago when he called upon all heads of departments to furnish lists of projects on which work could be intensified as well as new projects for which new authorizations would be asked. Its purpose, White House officials said, was to make possible the rendering of all possible federal aid to the unemployed not only by furnishing a maximum of government work but also by setting a stimulating example to private industry and state and municipal governments.

The Hoover program includes introduction of new building legislation, removal of time limitations on projects now authorized and new legislation which will remove limitations on certain industries now handicapped in their desires to expand construction efforts.

Approval by congress of the special appropriation will boost the funds available for construction work of all kinds in the federal government well above the 500 million mark, Mr. Hoover said. The exact amount to be requested of congress will depend upon the speed with which the treasury and other government departments can speed up their building and public works programs.

Advance Completion Dates.

Under the new plan announced by Mr. Hoover the completion dates of buildings, now authorized, would be pushed wherever possible. In many cases work which normally would not have been completed for three years will be finished in two. According to government officials work on the Chicago postoffice will be expedited as much as possible.

"It will be remembered," President Hoover said in his statement, "that the appropriations for federal construction were greatly increased upon the President's recommendation by the last congress as to employment during the current yer. The departments were also authorized to undertake necessary technical preparation for future construction work which was authorized but not appropriated for.

"As a result of appropriations available during the present fiscal year, the construction work of all kinds in the federal government will be increased to a total exceeding 500 million dollars.

Ready to Push Program.

"The emergency appropriations that will be requested will be in the nature of an addition to this already enlarged program and will be in anticipation of such construction work as would normally have taken place a year or two hence. The necessary technical preparation has been under way for some months and has now been advanced so that the programs can be further expanded for emergency purposes.

"The precise amount for the emergency appropriation has not yet been decided upon, but will be determined on a basis of authorized works for which the preliminary technical preparation has been or can be completed. The whole purpose is to provide further employment during the forthcoming year upon works of ultimate necessity."

The program of expansion is expected to cover almost all departments of the government, most of which have already expedited all work possible under current appropriations.

Treasury Increases Building.

The treasury department, largest dispenser of public funds for building projects, has under way works totaling almost 200 million dollars under congressional authorization for a $500,000,000 building program. Plans for buildings of a total of $125,000,000 have been assigned to private architects so that they might be completed more quickly than would be possible using only the drafting staff of the government.

As building construction is based on a ten year program it will be necessary to remove the time limitation actually to speed up work on the half billion dollar program so that it may be completed in five or seven rather than ten years. Enabling legislation of this nature will be asked if investigation discloses that the treasury is able to eliminate red tape and complete necessary designs and drawings in time to make it possible to let contracts in advance of the dates originally scheduled. Indications now are that the treasury architect's force will be swamped by Jan. 1.

Federal Road Funds Available.

Besides the building operations by the treasury the veterans' bureau has under way a program for the erection of hospitals and other units which require large sums of money and the department of agriculture is steward of appropriations which permit the expenditure of $125,000,000 a year on highways, provided the state individually match the federal contributions dollar for dollar in money used in their own states.

4 CRIPPLED INMATES DIE IN ASYLUM FIRE; 106 OTHERS RESCUED

Marthasville, Mo., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Four inmates of the Evangelical Emmans home for feeble-minded and epileptics here were burned to death today by a fire of undetermined origin which destroyed one of the institution's groups of buildings.

The four burned to death were crippled and unable to get out of the building. Attendants led or carried 106 other inmates to safety.

The dead are William Hofsaess, 24, St. Joseph, Mo.; William Getz, 23, St. Louis; Milton Wellman, 40, Chicago, and Raymond Haas, 40, Louisville, Ky.

Patients Flee Blaze.

Massillon, O., Nov. 8.—(AP)—More than 200 inmates and attendants at the Massillon state hospital for the insane were forced to flee from three buildings early tonight when fire destroyed McKinley hall, dormitory, and auditorium building, and threatened several others.

Officials of the Massillon fire department expressed belief that the fire was of incendiary origin.

The flames started in the basement shortly before 6 p. m., and an hour later had virtually destroyed McKinley hall, with loss fixed by Supt. Arthur G. Hyde at $125,000.

JUDGE QUESTIONS JURORS TO SPEED MURDER TRIAL

CRIMINAL COURT.

Archie G. Smith, robbery, sentenced to 1 to 20 years in the penitentiary; Mike Orban, robbery, sentenced to 1 to 20 years in the penitentiary; John Harris and Gertrude Wyatt, accessory to robbery, sentenced to 1 to 2 years in the penitentiary by Judge Harry Fisher.

Lawrence Featherstone, larceny, sentenced to 1 to 10 years in Pontiac reformatory by Judge Joseph Sabath.

Judge Sabath in the Criminal court took steps yesterday to speed up the selection of the jury to try Frank H. Bell and Richard Sullivan for the murder of Christ Patras, manager of the Villa Rica café in North Clark street. As a result of the judge himself questioning the veniremen four more jurors were selected at the session yesterday. This makes a total of eight jurors sworn in.

The judge told the defendants and the attorneys that he expected them to see to it that the jury is completed tomorrow. He said too much time was being wasted even though the death penalty is being asked by the state.

Bell and Sullivan are bitter against each other even though they are co-defendants in a murder and some robbery cases. Sullivan charges that Bell tried to "frame him" by making a confession saying that the Patras killing was a direct result of the murder of Alfred Lingle. Bell said that they went to Patras to collect for the Lingle murder and that the café killing was the result of the café manager not making good on the promised payment.

BANK AUDITOR SEIZED; ADMITS $59,000 THEFT

Sporleder, auditor for the bank, confessed to Assistant State's Attorney C. Wayland Brooks that he took the money last July and lost it in the stock market.

Hoover Calls Upon Industry to Avoid Business Strife

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—The welfare of men and women in this machine age is more important than mechanical progress, President Hoover declared tonight in an address read at the White House.

Mr. Hoover's address was heard in a hundred banquet halls where offers of the H. J. Heinz company were gathered.

He called industrial conflict "the greatest waste in industry."

"Its most hurtful results are inflicted upon the lives and spirits of men and women," the President asserted. "We can measure its productive losses in unmade goods and unearned dollars, but incalculable is its needless toll of suffering.

"It is a pleasure to participate for a few moments in this tribute to Mr. Heinz," the President said. "It is also a satisfaction to engage for a moment in the anniversary of the establishment which has a record of over 60 years of continuous industrial peace.

An Example to Others.

"This long history is proof that there is common ground of mutual interest and humane relations between employer and employé, for this concern could not have weathered all these years of shifting currents in good times and bad times had it been otherwise.

"And year by year do we realize more of our responsibilities in the human relations within industry. Mechanization is so distinctive of our modern civilization that even as a mechanical conception we often tend to forget that the most wonderful and powerful machine in the world is the men and women themselves. It is the human being from which achievement is won far more than the tool.

"However astonishing may be the increase in usefulness of machines as they grow in size and ingenuity, their improvement is little as compared with the enlarged effectiveness of organized intelligence and coöperation when men pool their efforts to achieve a common end. Man's conquest of machines is less spectacular than his conquest of his own will.

A Triumph of Good Will.

"To build up and preserve unbroken a coöperative spirit between a great group of employers and employés for two long generations is a cheering proof of the possibilities of human nature. The secret of it is more important to mankind than any secret of trade or any new invention.

"Fortunately there is nothing mysterious about it, nothing patentable or exclusive, nothing that is not free to be used by all. The key to it is as old as the religions we profess. Its origins and its power lie in generations of education and scientific research, in the benignant forces of mutual good will, the spirit of mutual helpfulness, the virtues of patience and toleration and understanding.

Peace Wins the Victory.

"This spirit of accommodation has won all of the ultimate victories in history. Wars between nations, wars between groups within nations, industrial conflicts, all end in what appears to be victory for one of the contenders, but the real victory arrives only after the battle has been forgotten and when the human nature of both sides meets in cheerful agreement upon a common solution.

"Industrial conflict is the greatest waste in industry. It not only delays production and diminishes it, but its most hurtful results are inflicted upon the lives and spirits of men and women. We can measure its productive losses in unmade goods and unearned dollars, but incalculable is its needless toll of suffering.

Happiness First Object.

"Moreover, the purpose of industry is only in part to create objects, articles, and services which satisfy physical needs. This is an essential function; but the higher purpose of industry is to provide satisfactions of life to human beings, not alone in its products, but in the work of production itself. Unless industry makes living men and women and children happier in their work, unless it gives opportunity and creative satisfactions in the job itself, it cannot excuse its failure by pleading that at least it has kept them alive.

"Man learned the art of staying alive long before he learned the art of mechanics. The machine must build him a better life, not alone in time of leisure but in joy of work, than he knew before. I have every faith that in the broad view it is doing so, not only in its products and relief from sweat, but that it increasingly enlarges man's satisfactions in his toil.

"I congratulate you most heartily upon the part that you have all played in the task of subordinating the mechanism of industry to the well-being of the men and women who operate it. This experience may not be universal. If it were, the world would be wealthier in spirit by the incalculable

RADIO DIAGNOSTICIAN MAKES ONE BLUNDER; IT'S WRONG PATIENT

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 8.—[U.P.]—B. C. Smith, who styles himself a "spectrochrome-therapist," was in jail tonight charged with larceny by trick.

He charged a client $10 for a "diagnosis", which was obtained by the patient holding two radio tubes while the radio was tuned in on a station. The "diagnosis" showed, Spectrochrome-Therapist Smith said, that the client had brain trouble, weak heart, poor kidneys, granulated eyelids, and symptoms of rheumatism.

The client was Otto Fischl, investigator for the health department. He arrested "Dr." Smith.

NEW BRAZILIAN REGIME IS GIVEN U. S. RECOGNITION

Stimson Acts After Talk with Hoover.

BULLETIN.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Announcement was made tonight that Great Britain has recognized the provisional government set up following the recent revolt in Brazil.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—The United States today accorded official recognition to the new revolutionary Brazilian government set up by Dr. Getulio Vargas on Nov. 3.

In a formal statement issued by Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson the state department announced that the American ambassador at Rio has been instructed to notify the Vargas government that the United States "will be very happy to continue the same friendly relations it enjoyed with its predecessors."

The move to resume friendly diplomatic relations with the Brazilian government set up following the successful October revolution was made at the request of Dr. Vargas. The decision not to further delay formal recognition was based on the promise of the Vargas government to respect national obligations contracted abroad as well as treaties and other international obligations.

By acting today the United States assumed the leadership among the larger powers in offering to resume diplomatic relations with the rebel government that overthrew the Washington Luis régime.

As the situation now stands, Dr. Vargas will enjoy any benefits that may accrue from the embargo plastered on arms shipments to Brazil at the request of former President Luis.

COKE COMPANY IS SUED FOR $3,500,000 AS A GAS MENACE

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—A $3,500,000 suit for damages filed today against the Clairton By-Products Coke company charges that gas burned in the open, which could be used commercially, is endangering the life and property of property owners adjacent to the plant.

The suit was filed in behalf of 38 owners of land near the plant. It also charges that the company is in a conspiracy with "other divers companies" to maintain the 60 per cent a thousand consumer rate for illuminating gas.

Enough gas is manufactured in the by-product manufacture of coke, the bill alleges, to supply New York, Boston and Chicago, but instead of purifying the gas, the company calls it "sulphur gas" and burns it in the open.

FEMININE DRY WITH RUM MEN SHOT; MAY DIE

Concord, N. H., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Shot mysteriously as she mingled with the bootleggers she was paid to betray, Mrs. Mary G. Jeffrey, 32 year old mother of two children, whose zeal as a dry agent made her known as "the best woman snooper in New England," was near death today at Margaret Pillsbury hospital.

With two bullets in her chest, Mrs. Jeffrey murmured in her delirium:

"The authorities want me to take this on the chin and keep my mouth shut, but I won't do it if I'm going to die."

Held incommunicado by the detectives who guard her against further gangster vengeance, she asked to see her machinist husband, James Jeffrey, and her children.

His wife was employed by local, state and federal authorities in New Hampshire and Vermont to betray the route of rum shipments and other secrets of the bootleg trade, Jeffrey admitted.

"She made scads of money, but it was dangerous work, and I was afraid this would happen to her some day," Jeffrey said.

POLL DISCLOSES WANT IN HOMES OF JOBLESS MEN

Many Lack Food and Fuel; Some Face Eviction.

BY KATHLEEN McLAUGHLIN.

Among the queues of jobless waiting for registration yesterday were cases which illustrate the acute needs arising out of the unemployment situation.

There was the young widow who had attended a university for a year, now spending her nights at the Hyde Park police station through the kindness of the force there. She has a three year old son, and she has had no work for six months. She had done general housework, worked as a waitress, and solicited from door to door for a magazine company. Now, at 23, she is destitute and hopeless.

His Wife Is an Invalid.

There was the scrupulously neat, gray haired man of 60, who for 20 years was a floor manager for a loop clothing concern. He was laid off seven months ago and has found no work since. His wife is an invalid, and they have been served with an eviction notice by their landlord. Like many of his fellow unfortunates, the man asked for "any kind of work at all."

There was the pathetic 42 year old janitor, one of the few that admitted his physical condition is not good. A year and a half ago he lost his last job. There is no food nor fuel in his home. He has moved three times in a year because he could not pay his rent, and another eviction is imminent. He was loaned a coat and shoes by a neighbor in order to make the trip to the registration place yesterday, and he begged for some position as elevator operator or any light work.

At the Jones school, Harrison and Plymouth court, Mrs. Margaret Babcock, in charge of the teachers and the janitors, who were handling the registration there, told of one middle aged man who, when asked his emergency needs, broke down and cried. He had not eaten in three days. The teacher taking the data on his case pressed a dollar bill into his hand.

Sells Clothes to Buy Food.

One 60 year old woman declared she had been forced to sell her clothing and furniture in order to eat, yet could not meet the rent on her small home, which is only $15 a month. For four dresses she received only $5. She cannot do housework, but is a good cook.

Bernard E—— is 72 years old. His case attracted attention at the board of education department at 188 West Randolph street, where hundreds of similar cases had already been heard. His wife is an invalid, 76 years old, with only him to provide for her. He had no money, no food, no fuel in the house, and was behind in his rent. He has had no work—as a laborer—for two years. The circumstances seemed so desperate that a collection was taken up among the registrars to help him out temporarily.

Out of Job for Seven Months.

Another story of a desperate plight was told by a coal miner, George S——. He has a sick wife and a crippled daughter, owes $100 board, and has not been able to find a job in seven months.

"Did you ever stop to think how long the days are when you haven't anything to do?" one brawny chap, 29 years old and six feet three inches tall, asked Mrs. Babcock. "A year ago the C., B. & Q. laid me off, temporarily, they said. I've looked everywhere for work. I go to the public library and wash my shirt in the wash room there, cribbing a bar of soap wherever I can. I've only one sock left—the other gave out. If I don't get something soon I'll simply have to check out—that's all."

The Madison street hobo type was conspicuously absent from these lines of men. Many were well dressed, though their clothes were showing signs of wear. More than a few curtly declared they could not accept charity—all they wanted was work. Miss Anne Davis, directing the registration at the board of education headquarters at 460 South Wabash avenue, pointed out that the majority are skilled workers.

FIGURES ON CHICAGO'S JOBLESS WORKERS

The table below shows the number of unemployed who had registered in the various schools at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. At that time the total was 75,218, of whom 33,921 were classified as "needy" and in need of immediate relief:

WIFE KILLED IN AUTO HE DROVE; SUES OWN FIRM

Rockford, Ill., Nov. 8.—[U. P.]—Jacob Krause sued today his own company for $10,000 damages as the result of his wife's death in an automobile accident near Elgin Nov. 13, 1929.

He named as defendant the Krause Supply company, of which he is president and owner. The accident occurred, Krause charged, while he was en route to Chicago on company business and was acting as an agent for the supply company. He charged he drove the automobile in a "careless and improper manner," which resulted in his wife's death, and contended that the company is liable.

The Krause company is a corporation and carries liability insurance. Krause was seriously injured in the accident.

a fraction of New York's jobless army.

At the Detroit registration, which observers pronounced highly efficient, the total figure was 90,000 jobless. Since economists and labor experts have pronounced Detroit's unemployment more acute than Chicago's, members of the commission decided that, on a comparative basis, the registration here yesterday pictured the situation as clearly here as the Detroit registration had in that city.

Many varied occupations and conditions of life were represented in the ranks at the census centers. There was a father of seven, a skilled mechanic, who had borrowed shoes to make the trip downtown. There was a white haired widow, neatly dressed and with patient face, who hoped for a position as a governess.

The number and detail of questions on the blanks in some cases impeded quick registration. At the Farren school, 5030 South Wabash avenue, some 800 Negroes in the waiting line became incensed at the detail and threatened to become unruly until police were called. Practically no disorder was observed elsewhere, however.

Questions to Registrants.

Registrants were required to state their name, age, address, time and place of last employment, profession or trade if any, number of dependents and church or club affiliation. The last question was inserted to facilitate allotment of needy cases to the proper charity, whether Catholic, Protestant, Jewish or nonsectarian.

Matching dollar for dollar, Sears, Roebuck & Co. will join with 30,000 employés in a move to raise $500,000 for national unemployment relief during the next sixteen weeks, it was revealed last night. The mail order house pledges itself to give one dollar for every dollar contributed by an employé.

Plans for the employés-company contribution will be submitted to the employés tomorrow. Its approval is certain, officials said, the relief program having originated with the employés themselves.

Rail Employés to Aid.

Announcement was made last night by the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific railroad that its 40,000 employes would contribute part of their pay to aid 10,000 idle employés of the railroad. The subscriptions will be voluntary, and will be deposited with the treasurer of the road and administered by the executive relief committee. Relief groups will be formed at the various divisions and terminals of the road

PARTY CONTROL OF CONGRESS IS STILL UP IN AIR

Coalition Likely to Hold Balance of Power.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—The question which major party will organize congress in 1931 remained a puzzle today for which capital politicians and officials had no solution. The latest returns from the congressional elections Tuesday give the Republicans a scant majority over the Democrats in both houses, but left control of legislation largely in the hands of a coalition of Democrats, radical Republicans, and two Farmer-Laborites, one in the house and the other in the senate.

As matters now stand the outcome of the fight to organize the senate and house probably will not be settled definitely in advance of the convening of the Seventy-second congress in December, 1931. The final decision will rest on the outcome of special elections, if necessary, to fill vacancies, recounts in closely contested districts already called for by both parties, and the position taken finally by radical Republican congressmen and the two Farmer-Laborites, Senator Henrik Shipstead [Minn.] and Representative Paul J. Kvale [Minn.]

Recounts May Change Things.

While the Republicans have a paper margin of one vote over the Democrats in the senate party leaders have no assurance that members of the radical group will vote with them on matters of legislation. Much the same condition exists in the house, where recounts and special elections may leave the Republicans and Democrats with an equal number of seats. Latest returns, unofficial but complete, give the Republicans 48 senate seats, the Democrats 47, and the Farmer-Labor party 1. The house vote, according to returns received at Republican national headquarters tonight, was Republicans 219, Democrats 215, and Farmer-Labor 1.

Two topics today dominated congressional speculation on the organization and control of the next congress. One centered on the question of whether Senator Brookhart or other radicals actually would bolt the Republicans on organization. The other had to do with the reaction among Republicans and Democrats alike to the pronouncement made yesterday by seven leading Democrats who pledged the Democratic party to solve economic problems on a nonpartisan basis and to coöperate with the Republicans in bringing about a restoration of prosperity.

Some are Skeptical.

The latter announcement was variously received by party leaders. Republicans were inclined to look upon the pronouncement with some skepticism while many Democratic leaders were disgruntled because they had not been consulted prior to its publication.

Senator James E. Watson [Rep., Ind.], majority leader of the senate, expressed the opinion that the Democratic promise not to play politics and to coöperate in unemployment legislation during the 72d congress was most acceptable to the majority party. He added that if the pledges of the Democrats were carried into action the country could rest assured of beneficial national legislation in the next two years.

Senator Brookhart, on the other hand, interpreted the statement as intended to halt the decline in the stock market and as emanating from persons representing Wall street influence. His comment, given in a public statement, carried indications that perhaps he might not vote with the Democrats on organization matters after all unless they changed their prospective legislative program. Indications tonight were that neither party wishes to pay the price of indorsing Brookhart's policies in order to obtain his vote on organization matters.

Nye to Back G. O. P.

Senator Gerald Nye [Rep., N. D.], another of the radical group, said today he would vote on organization with the Republicans, and his example probably will be followed by most of the rest of the group, as its membership would lose several committee chairmanships if the Democrats organized the senate.

Two leading Democratic senators, who declined to be quoted, said that the party's position on legislation will be decided in conference and not through statements issued by those not directly connected with legislative matters. In some Democratic quarters the issuance of the statement was described as "presumptuous."

These Democratic senators asserted that the party's record will be made by affirmative legislation, and such legislation must necessarily disturb existing conditions to some extent.

Brookhart Speaks Up.

Discussing the Democratic statement, Mr. Brookhart said:

"The Republican party got what it deserved, but I'm not sure the Democratic party deserved what it got. The Democratic statement has all the earmarks of the old fashioned, bipartisan, Wall street control. It is signed by three defeated candidates for the presidency, all belonging to the Wall street crowd.

"The Democratic statement would be all right if it contained a bill of particulars as to the relief of agriculture and unemployment. The agricultural situation is the worst yet. Prices are the lowest in twenty-four years. Our pledges to help agricuture have been kept by bringing small industries down to the agricultural level."

Senator Watson said he was glad to see the Democrats pledge themselves not to fight constructive legislation advanced by the Republicans to aid business. He thought that this assurance and the known position of the Republican party on questions should give assurance to business men that nothing will be done to disturb their activities.

Watson Is Reassuring.

"From the standpoint of national policy or policies, no change is likely to occur," Senator Watson said. "That ought to establish a pretty satisfactory condition for American business. At least, it should assure business stability. We will have a Republican congress and whichever party controls the next congress or even if control is divided, the country may rest assured that no legislation hurtful to good business can be enacted. That safeguard should give business greater confidence.

"Every right-thinking person wants prosperous conditions, whichever party may be in control. Every one interested in prosperous business conditions, good wages and good times, will look askance at any party leader who plays politics for party benefit and against the public interest. This is not the time to play politics. It is time for members of congress to be statesmen in solving the nation's problems.

"Congress must help business in putting more men back to work and starting a new cycle of prosperity."

His Vote May Decide House Control

Paul John Kvale, 34 year old Farmer-Labor congressman from Minnesota, who refuses to tell how he will vote in event his decisions will be controlling factor in struggle between Republicans and Democrats to organize Seventy-second congress. [Pacific and Atlantic Photo.]

LET G. O. P. ORGANIZE AND BE RESPONSIBLE, DEMOCRAT PROPOSES

New Orleans, La., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Senator-elect John H. Bankhead, who defeated Senator J. Thomas Heflin in the Alabama election, said in a statement here today he would oppose organization of either the senate or house by the Democrats even if the official result of the national election should give the Democrats a majority.

"I do not want the Democrats to have anything to do with the Hoover administration," he said. "Let the Republicans organize and run things as they want, until they get out of office and then the Democrats will take the situation over.

"I do not want the Republicans to be placed in a position where they can alibi their shortcoming on any member of the Democratic party."

Even Before the Pure Food Laws . . .

LONG before Pure Food Laws were known, Housewives who patronized National Tea Co. Stores found that every food product offered was pure and wholesome. National Tea Co. is proud of this record, and is happy to continue it in over 1700 stores today, made possible by appreciative patrons.

Until the Pure Foods and Drugs Act of 1906, the consuming public was completely at the mercy of any adulterated food product unscrupulous merchants chose to offer. Many such foods were positively harmful in acid and coloring content.

From the first, National Tea Co. has been called THE QUALITY GROCERS, and by carefully maintaining uniform quality of pure wholesome foods, which were offered in clean, neat appearing stores, National Tea Co. is now known as "THE QUALITY GROCERS of THE MIDDLE WEST."

National Tea Co. and Piggly Wiggly Stores today offer the Modern Housewife a complete variety of well known quality food products—foods unheard of thirty years ago. Still, its standards of purity remain fixed and constant; assuring its patrons the finest quality foods available at everyday low prices due to economical methods of scientific food distribution.

UTILITIES FACE BEING AN ISSUE IN 1932 CHOICES

Many Elected as Power Trust Enemies.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

That the issue of water power and of the regulation of public utilities generally is likely to figure prominently in the 1932 presidential election is foreshadowed by the results of the elections last Tuesday.

Candidates who have made heap big political medicine by warring upon the power trust and other public utilities were elected to high state or national offices in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Montana, Colorado, Arizona and Oregon.

The most significant victory of a foe of the power trust whose official and political activities with regard to this issue will be watched by the country with great interest during the next two years is that of Gifford Pinchot, radical Republican, who was elected governor of Pennsylvania.

Enemy of Utilities.

Mr. Pinchot, who is a government ownership advocate, was elected on a personal platform of pledges one-half of which was devoted to what he intends to do to the public utilities when he assumes the office at Harrisburg which he held once before, between 1923 and 1927.

Mr. Pinchot maintains that the water power, gas, electric light, telephone, traction, and bus utilities have a stranglehold on Pennsylvania, controlling regulatory commissions, state officers, and the legislature and exploiting consumers without let or hindrance. He promised the voters in his canvass that he would change all this, principally by abolishing the present appointive public utility commission and substituting therefor an elective "fair rate board" with regulations favoring the consumers instead of the utilities.

May Have Fight in Legislature.

According to Mr. Pinchot the Pennsylvania utilities do pretty much as they please. When they want to raise rates they merely notify the commission, which immediately puts the new charges into effect and places upon the consumers the burden of proof that the rates are excessive. Mr. Pinchot would reverse this by keeping the lower rates in effect until the utilities could prove higher rates justified.

Fireworks are looked for at Harrisburg this winter, for the complexion of the legislature elected at the same time as Mr. Pinchot indicates that he will have a fight on his hands to put through his anti-utility program.

Mr. Pinchot in his utterances has given cause for the surmise that he expects to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for President two years hence on the twin issues of prohibition and public utilities. He is a bone dry who would keep the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act intact, and he would get his big chance for the presidential nomination on this issue if President Hoover should backslide from prohibition orthodoxy and advocate a wee bit of relaxation for the rigors of Volstead.

State Backing Problematical.

Whether he would have the backing of his state for his presidential aspirations in the Republican national convention is a question that will be determined by the Pennsylvania Republicans not without considerable bitterness and a further scrambling of the factions in that party which signalized the election last Tuesday in which the candidacy of Mr. Pinchot split the G. O. P. in his state.

In the late election Mr. Pinchot, despite his position on public utilities, was supported by the Mellons and by Senator Joseph R. Grundy, head of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' association. Mr. Grundy, whose political partnership with Mr. Pinchot dates from 1922, expects to be the power behind the throne at Harrisburg, if not the new Republican boss of the state.

How far Mr. Grundy, not to mention the Mellons, will be disposed to go to further the presidential aspirations of Mr. Pinchot or even to make him head of the Pennsylvania delegation to the Republican national convention is a matter of interesting speculation among politicians. In 1924 when Mr. Pinchot was governor he wanted to be a delegate to the national convention, but despite all the gubernatorial influence and patronage he was denied that honor.

Might Head Third Party.

If, however, Mr. Pinchot should fail to get anywhere with his presidential ambitions in the Republican party he could fall back upon the nomination of a third party composed chiefly of radicals and bone drys of both the old parties. He would be more at home in a third party than in the G. O. P., according to his Republican foes who circulated in the late campaign a letter he wrote after the demise of the Progressive party, with which he was affiliated, stating that he never would return to the Republican party, but would remain an independent.

Whether pursuing his presidential ambition within or outside of the Republican party, Mr. Pinchot would appeal for support chiefly to the Republican agrarian radicals of the west, led by Borah, Norris, Brookhart, and La Follette, with whom he is identified and who gave him aid and comfort in his recent political battle. He has qualified as a leader of the agrarian radicals not only by his assaults on the power trust but by his advocacy of the export debenture and other farm relief policies of this group. His Washington residence for years has been the meeting place of the western Republican insurgents. It was there that the program of opposition to the Hoover farm and tariff legislation in this congress was perfected.

Wisconsin Halfway for Pinchot.

The radical bloc was further strengthened last Tuesday by the election of Philip La Follette to the governorship in Wisconsin. Philip is a hefty coadjutor of his brother, Senator Robert M. La Follette, in assailing the power trust. They see eye to eye with Mr. Pinchot on the power issue but not on the prohibition issue, the brothers La Follette and their Wisconsin following being wet, yea unto the dripping degree.

Thus when Mr. Pinchot fares forth for the Presidency on a platform of water and water power the brothers La Follette will be torn between water power and beer and the chances are that with their following, considerably more het up on the question of the restoration of beer than of putting the proper crimp in the water power trust, the brothers La Follette will be compelled to part company with Gifford. In that event the brothers La Follette may find comfortable lodgment under the tent of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York who is not unlikely to be the Democratic candidate for President on a platform advocating repeal of the eighteenth amendment and of a conservative shriving of the utilities.

Gov. Roosevelt is inclined to lean heavily on the water power issue as a vote getter. In his campaign for reelection he sought to make water power the paramount issue. He was disposed to ignore the issue of the Tammany scandals growing out of the alleged sale of judgeships. He declared for the development of Niagara, the St. Lawrence and other water power by the state instead of handing it over to the water power trust.

Mr. Roosevelt, however, took a position about midway between the radicals and the conservatives on this issue. He was not for public operation as well as ownership like the radicals, nor for private ownership as well as operation, like the conservatives. He would have the state own the water power which would be developed and purveyed by private agencies under leases from the state.

This middle of the road position may cause Gov. Roosevelt some trouble with the radical fringe of his party and possibly with the conservative element, though the latter appeared to swallow Al Smith's attitude on water power in 1928 which was essentially the same as that of his successor. Incidentally Mr. Smith made a fizzle of his injection of the water power issue into the 1928 election, the only appreciable effect of which was to subject him to arraignment by the Republicans as a Socialist.

Walsh Also in Quandary.

Senator Thomas J. Walsh [Dem., Mont.] will find himself as uncomfortable in attempting to support Gov. Roosevelt for President as the brothers La Follette in supporting either Mr. Pinchot or Mr. Hoover. Senator Walsh is the author of the drive on the water power trust. He started it back in 1927 when, according to uncharitable colleagues on his side of the senate chamber, he had a notion that water power was all he needed to achieve the Democratic nomination for President in 1928. On water power Gov. Roosevelt is too conservative for Senator Walsh and on prohibition 100 per cent too wet. Senator Walsh logically belongs in the Pinchot camp as to both water power and prohibition.

Senator George W. Norris [Rep., Neb.], reelected last Tuesday, has distinguished himself by greater activity even than Senator Walsh in the fight on the water power trust. He will be a prominent figure in the 1932 presidential election, opposing President Hoover on everything and probably lining up with Mr. Pinchot. Inasmuch as the Republican party doubtless will take a conservative attitude on the water power issue Senator Norris, if Mr. Pinchot should fail him, may be driven into the Democratic party again as he was in 1928.

Hoover's Ideas Hit.

One of the personal affronts President Hoover suffered in the late election was due to his attitude on the water power issue. Mr. Hoover on water power is ultra conservative. He is opposed not only to public ownership, but to federal regulation. He stands for state regulation.

During the Republican primary election in Tennessee Representative B. Carroll Reece was hard pressed by a rival for the nomination because he had fought the radical Muscle Shoals legislation sponsored by Senator Norris. Mr. Reece stood for everything Mr. Hoover stood for in this matter. Mr. Hoover was adhering to a rule to keep hands off the primary elections, taking no sides between Republican candidates for office. But inasmuch as Mr. Reece had fought the President's fight in the house against the Norris Muscle Shoals bill and thereby aroused great opposition to himself in his Tennessee district Mr. Hoover thought he would be justified in making an exception to his rule.

So, the President wrote a letter, duly given to the press, defending Mr. Reece for his fight on the Norris bill. Mr. Reece was renominated and his victory was ascribed to the presidential epistolary help. But the Republican minority refused to stay beaten. It epistolary help. But the Republican candidate in the race against Mr. Reece and the Democratic candidate, and the independent won. The defeat of Mr. Reece, the President's candidate, is now being bracketed with the defeat of Senator Henry J. Allen [Rep., Kas.], the President's confidant and senate spokesman.

Movement Spreads East.

While the warfare on the water power trust originated in an attitude toward the utilities having its grass roots in the populism of the western prairies, one of the outstanding features of the elections this year was its spread in eastern states. In addition to New York and Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Connecticut plumped for candidates who were gunning for the public utilities. Dean Cross of Yale, Democrat, who was elected governor of Connecticut, dedicated himself to the destruction of the political control exercised by the electric light and power interests in that state.

All of these circumstances are regarded by the politicians as indicating that the water power and utility issue generally is not unlikely to be an important issue in 1932. The utilities are being adjured by their friends to put their house in order before the storm.

The indictment against the utilities is that they have built up intricate corporate structures that have bewildered the public and baffled the regulatory commission; that some of them have paid excessive prices for plants and tried to charge the excess to the consumers; that others under cover of rates still at pre-war levels, rising commodity prices and complaisant commission and courts have paid to their stockholders profits that should have been shared with the public.

Propaganda Criticized.

Some of the utilities have been detected secretely disseminating propaganda in their favor in the schools and colleges, though their activities in this direction do not appear to have been greater than the propagandizing of public ownership.

The Chamber of Comerce of the United States regards the issue as one that the business men of the country should take a position on without delay. To that end this organization is conducting a referendum of its membership on the report of its committee on national water power policies, which after more than a year's study has declared against government ownership and operation.

ROOSEVELT OUT OF 1932 RACE? FRIENDS SAY NO

Busy Interpreting His Statement.

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt has "removed" himself from consideration as a presidential aspirant, but by no means as a presidential possibility.

This is the interpretation being placed today on the governor's announcement of his intention to devote all his houghts, time, and consideration to the duties of his office, and to ignore any presidential boom in his favor. But the governor has by no means declared his unwillingness to lead the Democratic party in 1932, interpreters of his statement here think.

His declaration on the face of it, they point out, raises no bar to his possible entrance in the presidential race in 1932, but on the other hand, leaves the door open for such an eventuality.

There is no analogy to the famous "do not choose to run" statement of former President Coolidge, capitol observers say. The governor, they point out, has simply expressed his unwillingness to permit political speculation to interfere with his performance of the duties of his office.

It is recalled that Mr. Roosevelt made a similar statement in reference to the possibility of his reelection when he first embarked upon the duties of governor two years ago.

In his present statement he says that experience has shown him that he was right in devoting all his energies and thought exclusively to the governorship of the state. It is believed here that by "experience" he means the unparalleled plurality which returned him to Albany.

99 Years of Service

A total of 99 years' service to the city was celebrated yesterday by three employés of the department of health. Each of the employés has a record of 33 years in the city service, all having started work in the department in 1897. The employés are Thomas J. Claffey, 60 years old, assistant chief in the bureau of sanitary engineering; Edward L. Sanders, 59, supervising plumbing inspector, and James E. Brudenell, 59, plumbing inspector. Health Commissioner Kegel gave praise to them for their long and efficient work for the city.

WHEELS OF RENO DIVORCE MILL WILL GRIND ON

"Judgie" Bartlett Beaten by Another "Liberal."

Reno, Nev., Nov. 8.—[U.P.]—People of Reno—particularly the lawyers—are anxious for the world to know that the defeat of Judge George A. Bartlett, famous divorce jurist, at the polls this week will not reduce the liberality of Reno's divorce courts.

Judge Bartlett has been on the bench for eight years, and during that time has granted thousands of divorces, in an average time of seven minutes each. Scores of women who come to Reno periodically to break the ties of matrimony have come to think of a Reno divorce in terms of "Judgie" Bartlett.

He was defeated Tuesday by Benjamin F. Curler, who won the office of district judge of Washoe county with a majority of 300 votes. Curler is equally liberal in his views of annulment and divorce.

Curler was on the bench for eight years in Washoe county and it was during his term from 1906 to 1907 that the "divorce industry" in Reno got its foothold. The first two divorce cases to attract national attention were those of Dr. Peder Sather Bruguiere, son of a prominent San Francisco family, and Mrs. William E. Corey, wife of the president of the United States Steel corporation. Both divorces were granted by Curler.

Divorce was not an issue in the election campaign between Bartlett and Curler as both previously stated their liberal views on the subject.

Bartlett, known as "Judgie" to hundreds of divorce seekers who come to Reno to pour forth all their marital woes into his judicial ear, was the originator of the "sealed complaint" proceedings by which the names and details of the divorce complaint were kept secret. He held court in his private chambers behind locked doors and was known to the women as "sympathetic."

Judge Curler, unlike his predecessor, will hold open court in the court chambers. Judge Moran, second district judge, likewise holds open court.

Wife Is Granted Divorce from Dr. George G. Davis

Mrs. Mary Robbins Davis, 211 East Delaware place, yesterday won a divorce from Dr. George Good Davis, chief surgeon of the Illinois Steel company, before Superior Judge John J. Sullivan. Mrs. Davis charged mental cruelty and desertion. Attorneys announced that a property settlement had been arranged out of court. Dr. Davis and his wife were married on March 28, 1922, at Crown Point, Ind., and separated in May, 1927. Dr. Davis lives at the University club.

VOTE ACCIDENT VERDICT.

A verdict of accidental death was returned yesterday at an inquest into the death of Leroy Knott, 53 years old, 11 North Sheldon street, who died Friday in the County hospital of injuries received last Sunday when he was struck by a street car in front of 1034 West Madison street.

(A Business Editorial)

"STEADY BUYING STEADIES BUSINESS"

These words keynote the campaign the Association of Commerce has announced to help bring back to normalcy the business of Chicago and of the nation. This firm, of course, subscribes to and will co-operate with this constructive thought to the greatest extent.

We want no "hysteria"; no "buy now you might win a prize"; no "buy now regardless of consequences." We want, instead, normal buying by those employed and with a steady income. We know that such a policy will steady business and cut unemployment. Hoarding money because of a false fear helps no one but rather increases the dangers of the situation.

Just as this firm was in lead in 1920 with the Great Readjustment Sale, so again, in June of this year, it was in the lead of this very movement, and will continue to endeavor to be among the leaders for any worthwhile movement for the good of Chicago and of the Nation.

"Don't lose your head, use it," "Business as Usual," "Keep your employees employed" and, by all means, "Smile thru" should be the slogans on everyone's lips.

All congratulations and success to the Association of Commerce in this noble endeavor.

CHICAGO MAY BE SCIENCE'S BASE IN WAR ON CRIME

Plan Laboratory to Find Cure for Social Evils.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

Chicago may become the center of the war of science against the rising tide of professional crime.

It will not be a spectacular conflict and may be largely unknown to the general public, for the weapons of science are patient investigation, the array of facts to determine causes, statistics, charts, graphs.

In the long run, however, say by the time that Samuel Insull's 1965, with its 9,000,000 population, rolls around, science sees the gradual control and lessening of the minority anti-social forces.

One of the first questions, which is to be answered soon, is whether a national institute of criminology should be established, and, if so, where and by whom.

Report Is Expected Soon.

Columbia university has undertaken this survey, which has been going on for two years, with the aid of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Bureau of Social Hygiene of New York, and a report is expected in December. A recommendation for the establishment of such an institute is anticipated, with Chicago among the sites to be considered. A combination of private funds and official state status probably would be considered necessary, and the institute would be situated where political interference would cause the least friction.

Chicago has attracted attention not because of the amount of crime here, but because it presents a laboratory field in which much valuable pioneer work has been done. This may be said to have begun with Dr. William Healy, formerly of the psychiatric bureau of the city health department and now with the Baker Foundation in Boston. More recently the work of Herman Adler of the Institute for Juvenile Research has attracted national attention. This institute, it is said, might well serve as a starting point for a national institution of the kind contemplated.

University of Chicago Program.

The University of Chicago has embarked upon a big program in social science under the leadership of Prof. Donald Slesinger, Prof. Ernest W. Burgess, Prof. Edwin Sutherland, August Vollmer, and John Landesco. It combines the practical with the theoretical, while a national institute of criminology would delve more deeply into the fields of biology, psychology, anthropology, and economics in its search for the long time corrective. The University of Chicago school deals also with police administration and has in mind a community experiment which would correlate all the existing forces for social good. The statistics of the parole board show that certain districts produce criminals with regularity and persistence, and therefore the economic problem comes to the front.

Northwestern university has taken under its wing a laboratory for work on current criminal problems. There is an immense scientific field here that is ready for use by the constituted authorities. The trouble is that the police have not been educated along this line and are slow to take advantage of the aid of science. The University of Illinois has experts and equipment that are not used at all. This branch of the work might be taken as an adjunct to a national institute of the kind suggested.

In looking over the past with an eye to forecasting the problems of the future, the criminologists are handicapped by a lack of statistics in the United States. It is only recently that the federal government has undertaken to gather and publish crime data. A life insurance actuary may tell how many men of a certain age will die during a given period, but the criminologist is not yet able to tell how many paroled men will violate parole or how many young criminals will be bred in a certain district. They are aiming at this, however.

"Political interference is one of the greatest handicaps to this sort of work," said Prof. Sutherland, who has recently come to the University of Chicago from the University of Minnesota. He is the author of a text book on criminology and is one of the foremost experts in this work in the United States. He has just returned from a study of English prisons.

"In England," he said, "it is interesting to see how the political factor is never considered in dealing with the prison problem or the crime problem in general. They do not put men in charge of prisons for political party work."

Finding on Organized Crime.

The absence of statistics makes it impossible to show just what has been happening in the United States, but it is generally stated by criminologists that there has been a steady increase in professional crime since 1900. Two other generalities are made: that 80 per cent of this crime is by the second generation of aliens and 80 per cent by youths under 28. Organized crime of the gangster type is a phenomenon of the last ten years, the dry decade.

"I think the scientific attitude will in time lead to control of crime," said Prof. Sutherland, "but I cannot make any predictions as to the future."

It comes back to the problem child and the treatment of individuals. There is a trend toward the use of psychiatry, or psychoanalysis, in connection with social work reports in each case before punishment is decided. This amounts to guidance of the judges and their reeducation in many cases.

The Lombrosian theory of the criminal type, or class, has been discarded, and it is the individual who is being considered now, rather than the offense. There are some first offenders who might well be locked up for life, and others, guilty of more serious crimes, whom science could rehabilitate. Science would reeducate the judiciary and the lawyers, take the police and institutional jobs out of politics altogether, reform the criminal procedure to fit modern society.

SEEK TO MOVE RED BARKER TO PENITENTIARY

He May Lose Easy Job in Reformatory.

George (Red) Barker, labor union racketeer, who was the first man sent to a penal institution in the present drive against gunmen, hoodlums, and racketeers, may find himself removed from a purportedly soft berth at Pontiac reformatory to one of the shops or stone quarries at the penitentiary near Joliet.

Barker is scheduled to appear in Chief Justice John P. McGoorty's criminal court on Nov. 17 on a motion to transfer him from the reformatory to the penitentiary because he is far over the reformatory age limit of 26 years. The motion is pending because of a petition filed in Judge McGoorty's court by Assistant State's Attorneys Harry Ditchburne and James Brown.

Given Highest Ranking.

The labor agent for one of the branches of the Coal Teamsters' union (Barker has not been removed from the union office, even though he was sent to Pontiac) was given an "A" classification when he was returned to Pontiac to serve out an unexpired term for larceny. This is the highest grade for the prisoners. Barker was given the same classification, it was explained by the Pontiac warden, as he had when he was paroled many years ago. The fact that he is looked on as a parole violator did not start him out with the rank ordinarily accorded a new prisoner.

Barker was assigned to kitchen duty in the officers' kitchen, which is considered by some police officials as one of the easy jobs at the reformatory.

The age limit in Pontiac as specified by the law is for prisoners 26 years or under. Barker is 34 years old, it is said.

The machine gun and nine revolvers and pistols found by Pat Roche, chief investigator for State's Attorney Swanson, in the hotel room and apartment of Terry Druggan were delivered yesterday to Col. Calvin Goddard, director of the Scientific Crime Detection laboratory, affiliated with Northwestern university.

Col. Goddard will fire specimen bullets from all of the weapons and then compare the specimens under the microscope with bullets taken from the bodies of gang victims. A week or ten days will be required before a report can be made, Investigator Roche was told.

Despite the "illness" which his physician said prevented Terry from appearing in court, Druggan managed to keep safely hidden yesterday from the eyes of the investigators who are seeking him now on two warrants. One is a capias issued by Judge John H. Lyle when Druggan failed to appear for a vagrancy trial, and the other is a contempt writ issued by Judge Lyle charging Terry with trying to deceive the court into granting a delay.

Meanwhile an investigation of the papers found in Druggan's room in the Morrison hotel, and in his apartment at 7944 Greenview avenue, was being made by federal agents and by Charles F. Rathbun and James E. McShane, assistant state's attorneys.

Asks Bond Information.

Judge Lyle suggested yesterday to Assistant State's Attorney Harry S. Ditchburne that bonding concerns operating in Cook county be asked to supply the state with information concerning the posting of bonds for criminals.

Mr. Ditchburne presented the suggestion to State's Attorney Swanson, who approved, and telegrams were to be prepared asking the bonding companies to inform the state's attorney whether they are signing bonds for men charged with crimes in Chicago for a consideration, what that consideration is, and under what circumstances they are signing the bonds.

THROUGH A THOUSAND EVEN GRADATIONS FROM THE LOWEST BASS NOTE TO THE HIGHEST TREBLE

TONE CONTROL on the new BRUNSWICK RADIO

The new Brunswick Radio gives you perfected Tone Control instead of a device which permits only 3 or 4 predetermined changes in tonal emphasis. With it you can make a thousand even gradations of tone, changing emphasis from the heaviest bass notes through the whole musical scale to the silvery high notes of the treble.

ENABLES YOU
1. To modify reception through 1000 even gradations of tone from bass to treble.
2. To cut down appreciably the nuisance of static.
3. To compensate for the inadequacy of the human ear on very high or very low notes.

But Tone Control is only one of the many new features on Brunswick Radio. Most important of all is the UNI-SELECTOR, a radically new method of operating the set, so that every function is centered in this one control. The All-Armored Chassis; and the rigid Tuning Scale, which always brings in stations at exactly the same point on the scale, are other features which will add to your pleasure in owning a Brunswick Radio.

Be sure to hear and operate this great new instrument before you buy. It has the full rich tone for which Brunswick has always been famous—and its new features make it more than up-to-date—it is literally the "Radio of the Future!"

OFFER BALLROOM FOR BENEFIT OF GOOD FELLOWS

Drake Seeks Ideas for Charity Affair.

J. B. Drake Jr., president of the Drake Hotel company, yesterday caught the fever to become a Good Fellow. He is asking for suggestions and for help in developing his idea.

"I'll donate the use of my main dining room with a dance orchestra for an evening," he said, "if these can be used to raise a substantial fund for the relief of Chicago's destitute families.

"I want practical ideas for raising money with this dining room and orchestra. Perhaps some capable group of society girls should be asked to sell tickets for a benefit ball, or maybe some lodge could raise more money with a charity dance, or maybe some sorority would be able to sell a lot of tickets for a taxi dance for charity.

Consider All Suggestions.

"I haven't any definite idea in mind, except that I want that dining room and orchestra to raise as much money as possible in one evening. All suggestions mailed to the Good Fellow department at THE TRIBUNE will be given consideration."

There are many and various benefits for the Good Fellow fund being planned by business men anxious to cooperate in the relief of destitute families and in hastening the return of prosperity by turning the public mind from pessimism to cheerful charity.

The first of these large benefits was held yesterday by John P. Harding. An auditor last night was counting the dollars raised for the Good Fellow fund through Mr. Harding's donation of the day's receipts at his 21 South Wabash avenue restaurant. The receipts from dinner and lunch checks were augmented by the returns on a bazaar held in the afternoon with merchandise donated by various stores. Helen Morgan, star of "Sweet Adeline," and East and Dumke of W-G-N were among entertainers who drew a large crowd.

Sell Tickets for Charity Ball.

The Illinois Woman's Athletic club is selling tickets for a charity ball to be held during the holidays for the benefit of the Good Fellow fund.

While these large affairs do much toward raising substantial lump sums for the relief work, the success of the Good Fellow movement rests on the donations and pledges of individuals and associates in offices, factories, shops, churches, and clubs.

The mainstay of the Good Fellows consists of such donations as—picked at random from the day's mail—the $7 sent by Miss Goldye A. Solomon, representing a group of girls who have pledged themselves to this amount weekly.

Every penny turned over to the Good Fellow headquarters, in THE TRIBUNE offices at Dearborn and Madison streets, reaches some destitute family. THE TRIBUNE pays all the expenses of administration.

Mayor of California Town Wants Colored Paving

Carmel, Cal., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Herbert Heron, Carmel's poet mayor, came out openly for colored paving last night.

WORK IS WANTED: 'ANY KIND'; PLEAS POUR IN TO SALLY

Former Executives, Boys, Women Hope for Jobs.

"I have had stenographic, secretarial and selling experience, and formerly was branch manager of the S. P. corporation, but I would gladly take anything now," reads a neatly written letter to Sally Joy Brown of THE TRIBUNE, who is helping the unemployed obtain positions. It is a refrain repeated in letter after letter —"I would gladly take any kind of work now."

Miss Brown asks that all concerns and individuals who can offer jobs to deserving persons call her. Offers are then sent to the Illinois Free Employment agency at 116 North Dearborn street, where the jobs are distributed to the unemployed.

The writer of the foregoing note wanted to know if his 14 year old son could be provided with a winter overcoat.

A widow writes: "I am an experienced waitress and cashier. I have been to employment agencies all over the city and answered advertisements and hunted work at restaurant after restaurant but the answer is always the same, 'Too old. We want young girls.' I am a good cook and housekeeper."

A former railroad clerk writes: "I am strong and healthy and would gladly accept anything at all, janitor, handy man or any kind of manual labor. My wife is confined to an institution.

"My two children are, through necessity, being cared for by relatives. Last week I was compelled to go to the Wrigley home at 509 North Union avenue. I have a place here to sleep and eat but my clothing is so shabby that I cannot put up a decent appearance for an office position should an opportunity come."

An 18 year old boy, a high school graduate, writes: "I have tramped streets and answered ads until I've lost confidence in myself. I know that as far as intelligence is concerned I'm not lacking. I was the salutatorian of my class."

Great Sale of Fine Furniture

We have made reductions of the most drastic nature from today's low prices in order to reduce certain fine stocks that are too large for present conditions. Those who can buy now will profit as never before.

$2300 Carved Suite of 10 Pieces, Now $985

A beautiful hand-carved suite with the interesting detail after the 17th Century style. The finish is a soft, mellow brown with the highlights found in the antique. The table is of the refectory type and extends to 10 feet. Besides the pieces shown there is a serving table included in the group.

Only a few of the many bargains are listed here, but there is a wide variety. Only one of each in some cases and all are subject to prior sale.

ILLINOIS VOTE ON PROHIBITION

Unofficial returns of the vote on the three prohibition questions submitted to a state referendum last Tuesday have been collected from 7,062 of the 7,136 precincts in Illinois. These probably are the most complete figures obtainable until compilation of the official returns by Secretary of State Stratton several weeks hence. The missing precincts are in the following counties: Adams, 14; Alexander, 4; Cook, 26; Franklin, 4; Pope, 10, and Pulaski, 13. The vote tabulated so far in the 103 counties of the state is as follows:

NO DECISION YET ON LIQUOR, SAYS WICKERSHAM

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—A multitude of recent reports purporting to forecast the forthcoming recommendations of the Wickersham commission on the liquor question were described today as "purely conjectural" by Chairman George W. Wickersham.

Apparently perturbed over the broad interpretations placed upon a few meager facts which have leaked from the commission during the last few days despite its secrecy rule, Mr. Wickersham "by direction of the commission," handed to newspaper men the following statement:

"The attention of the commission has been called to various articles in different newspapers purporting to forecast when the report on prohibition of this commission will be made and what its recommendations will be. The commission has reached no conclusions which are ripe for publication at the present time. It cannot state when its report will be ready.

Task Not Yet Complete.

"There are certain phases of the investigation which the commission has not yet completed. Its report when completed will be sent to the President. Any public announcement concerning it must come from him. Any statements in advance as to the content of the report or the recommendations made are purely conjectural."

Paradoxically, the Wickersham statement, instead of putting to rest the swarm of rumors about the commission's activity, immediately gave rise to fresh ones, to the effect that the commissioners, having failed to agree even upon the time of making their report, are in a deadlock among themselves. Chairman Wickersham a few weeks ago said he had "hope" that a report would be ready for congress in December, but this statement today indicated that with December only three weeks away, the matter is still up in the air.

Two of the most widely heralded reports recently have been that the commission might ask for a constitutional convention on prohibition and that it would approve four per cent beer. THE TRIBUNE learned from a reliable source and stated last Thursday that these reports were unfounded.

Study Foreign System.

It also learned of and revealed the appearance before the commission of John M. Morehead, American minister to Sweden, and the fact that the commission is studying the liquor control plans of Sweden, Canada, Great Britain and other countries.

During the interval the commission has had available for its use a half million dollars appropriated by congress. It has employed numerous experts and established itself in an expensive suite of offices in one of Washington's newest buildings. Its members have traveled to and from the capital repeatedly.

GIRL BURNED; SUES BEAUTY SHOP.

A suit for $10,000 was filed in the superior court yesterday in behalf of Henriette La Mote, 15 years old, of 1427 Newark avenue, against a beauty shop at 8 West Adams street, for burns received while getting a permanent wave.

'SENATOR' HEARS CALAMITY HOWLS FROM G. O. P. NOW

Democrats Are Looking on Bright Side, He Finds

BY THE SENATOR.

It's a run go, the vicissitudes of politics and the unemployment situation among the pay-rollers. The Republicans, losers of some 2,000 jobs in Tuesday's landslide, are talking of holding their next county convention under the bridge. Bonfires to be free, but delegates will furnish their own blankets.

The victorious Democrats are beating it for Hot Springs to take the baths with 2,000 new jobs in the sack. Looks like a hard winter for many rollers in the G. O. P. vineyard and since Tuesday gloom has hung over many a swivel chair.

Meanwhile some seem to have changed their tunes. Some Democrats who specialized in calamity howling during the campaign have switched to the belief that prosperity is "just around the corner"—say five or six weeks from now, when Democrats expect to be prying Republicans from their jobs.

The Changing Viewpoint.

Some Democrats have been out ever since they were given the air two years ago when the fat was fried out of the sanitary district pay rolls, and since Tuesday, when they landed the 2,000 jobs in the basket, they regard the business depression as less depressed and the general economic status as considerably ameliorated.

Meantime some Republican jobholders who a week ago were arguing that hard times are all the harder when Democrats get in, are now saying that after New Year's they'll maybe be thanking Grover Cleveland for inventing soup houses and bread lines.

Over in the Sherman lobby, a couple of Republicans from the assessors' office blew in. "About Christmas time or sooner," says one, "we suppose the ax will fall. We're going to join the army—the army of the unemployed."

"Meet Me Under the Bridge."

"Yeah," says the second lad, "after New Year's meet me under the bridge. My address will be the Hoover hotel. I'm eating at slot machine hash houses but you can't save much jack these days, anyhow. The bleak December may see a lot of faithful Republican pay-rollers working the stem, making a dime touch on the link bridge: 'Mister, I hate to ask you, but please stake me to sinkers and java.'"

"It's no joke for a lot of guys," says the first one. "Bailiff Barney Know's lads will be out in the blizzard. The 'noble experiment' sure busted the test tubes in the laboratory. Andy Volstead loses me my job, though I never missed a chance to hook an elbow and always voted the best ticket, anyhow.

"Before Volstead a political leader like myself out of a job could buy a schooner of suds for a jit and spear a handful of red hots at the free lunch. Now we're going to be thrown out of jobs on account of the uprising against prohibition, and we haven't got the beer nor the free lunch.

He Can't See Any Santa.

"The lads who carried banners in the campaign got a lot of useful practice. There'll sure be a lot of them carrying the banner in the army of the jobless after the merry Christmas time. There ain't no Santa Claus."

"Who's going to be next mayor?" says the second fellow. "I asked an expert guy that and he says 'Aw, go and ask the City club.' A swell answer. I see Tony Cermak says the Democrats will not hold parties and blowouts, and won't permit flowers at inauguration. He says this dough will be given to the hungry and jobless instead. Well, a few weeks from now, we'll maybe be putting in for a couple of bucks from this fund.

"I went under the bridge last night and looked the layout over. I picked me a nice sleeping place next to the whale on the soap house lot. That's going to remind me that last Tuesday Hoover was the Republican Jonah."

"Well," says I, "and don't forget that Jonah himself was a 'miracle man.'"

Kenesaw M. Landis' Sister, 70, Seriously Hurt by Auto

Logansport, Ind., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Miss Frances Landis, 70, a sister of Kenesaw M. Landis, baseball commissioner, and Frederick Landis, former congressman, is in a serious condition at a hospital after having suffered a broken leg and a fracture of the shoulder bone when struck by an automobile while crossing the street last night.

DEMOCRATS HIE TO HOT SPRINGS AFTER WIN HERE

County Patronage Their Big Problem.

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Headed by A. J. Cermak, county chairman, the advance guard of the Cook county Democratic chieftains, arrived today to take the baths and medicinal waters and to sort out some 2,000 jobs, newly acquired in Tuesday's landslide, for distribution to worthy Democrats. A crate of assorted mayoralty booms, which was among the luggage, was shoved into the hotel refrigerator immediately upon arrival.

Patronage May Be Pooled.

Among the early arrivals are Ald. William D. Meyering, sheriff-elect; Ald. Joseph B. McDonough, county treasurer-elect; Ald. Albert J. Horan, Municipal court bailiff-elect; Charles H. Weber, county commissioner-elect. A second train leaves Chicago Sunday night bringing 100 more Democrats, and by the time the assemblage is complete 175 leaders of various sizes, large, small, medium and stylish stout, are expected to be on the scene.

All the patronage in the county and municipal court positions won Tuesday by the Democrats is to be pooled, by unanimous agreement. All the jobs, from the best to the lowest paid, are to be put in the hamper, and in the allotment weak wards are to be given full recognition to build them up.

One item in the early gossip is that James J. Sullivan, commiteeman of the Eighth ward, Mr. Meyering's home ward, may be the choice for chief deputy sheriff to succeed Charles W. Peters, who has been in that post for nearly three decades.

Another bit of gossip is that Mr. McDonough has declared he wants a banker of experience for county treasurer. Some have suggested M. C. Zacharias for the place. In the April primaries Mr. Zacharias was defeated for state treasurer by Edward J. Barrett, the youthful political newcomer who threw in his hat on a chance, spent $100 on his campaign, as he says, walked away with the nomination, and in Tuesday's landslide defeated Clarence F. Buck of Monmouth, manager for the Lowden for President movement in 1928, by more than 100,000.

Zacharias, after losing in the primaries for treasurer, was nominated for university trustee and on Tuesday he was defeated by George A. Barr of Joliet, Republican, one of the three Republican survivors on the state-wide ticket, the others being Richard Yates, congressman at large, and Francis C. Blair, superintendent of public instruction.

Woodhull for Sanitary Head.

So far as reorganization of the sanitary district is concerned, prevailing gossip is that Ross A. Woodhull may be elected president of the board Dec. 1, when the new members are sworn in. The Democrats will have members, and Howard Elmore will be the only Republican.

An echo of the 1928 coalition when the Cermak Democrats and the Deneen Republicans organized the board on a 60-40 basis, the Democrats taking 60 per cent and the Republicans 40 per cent of the jobs, and the presidency going to Mr. Elmore, was heard in the gossip. Emissaries saying they represented Trustees John J. Touhy, James M. Whalen, and Mr. Woodhull, holdovers, and Dennis A. Horan, trustee-elect, are said to have approached Mr. Elmore with a proposition the five cast their votes for Mr. Woodhull for president.

The gossip is that Elmore declined to enter any negotiations unless Mr. Cermak was present. When the alleged ambassadors said the three Democrats voted for Elmore for president two years ago, the story is that Elmore remarked: "Yes, they did. Mr. Cermak voted them for me." Elmore is said to have intimated he favors Woodhull for president, seeing he has no chance to reelected himself with eight Democrats out of nine on the board.

INCREASED FUND FOR WATERWAYS URGED BY DAWES

Early Work Proposed to Provide Jobs.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—William R. Dawes, president of the Mississippi Valley association, today urged White House officials to approve a substantial increase in river and harbors appropriations for next year as one means of alleviating the employment situation.

Following a discussion of the matter with Walter Newton, President Hoover's secretary in charge of waterway matters, Mr. Dawes said that he had urged that the current appropriations for this year be increased by $12,000,000 in the 1932 budget which will go to congress this winter. The current appropriations, including a deficiency fund of $12,000,000, total $67,000,000, Mr. Dawes said.

Asks Earlier Completion.

As a part of his program, Mr. Dawes urged that the war department program for completing the Illinois waterway be speeded up and additional funds for this purpose included in the budget. Under the war department program the $7,500,000 appropriated by the last congress to complete the old Illinois state waterway between Utica and Lockport would be scattered over three years, the sea route being completed in 1934. Mr. Dawes took the position this link of the lakes to the gulf route should be completed in 1933.

New Projects Added.

"I believe that the $67,000,000 appropriated last year for river and harbor work should be increased," Mr. Dawes said. "The river and harbor bill passed last year added many new projects to those already authorized. Unless the 1932 fiscal year fund is increased the moneys will have to be scattered over so many projects that some will have to suffer."

GERMANY PLACES $6,450 LIMIT ON OPERA STARS' PAY

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Nov. 8.—The maximum salaries of German opera stars have been cut from $240 to $150 for special performances and their highest yearly salaries have been set at $6,450 by the German Stage association. The ruling affects all opera houses in Germany and Austria.

The association states that the cuts are a result of financial difficulties, which have compelled a reduction in subsidies formerly paid by the state and municipalities. A similar cut is planned for actors, actresses and directors. The association is trying to convince them of the necessity of this step through friendly negotiations.

If the negotiations are successful, the public is promised a reduction in the price of theater tickets.

LASCAR AND CHINESE CREW OF FREIGHTER AT WHARF MUTINIES

New York, Nov. 8.—[Special.]—The Lascar and Chinese crew of the freighter Iris Bank, owned by Andrew Weir of London, mutinied when the captain, Ernest Blackmar, left the ship today.

The Iris Bank was scheduled to sail from Brooklyn for oriental ports at noon. The loading of the last of a full cargo was under way when Capt. Blackmar went to the offices of the line's agent in Manhattan. An hour later the crew attacked the three engineers. Fighting lasted for half an hour, down the depths of the ship. A telephone call brought a police squad from the Butler street station. The entrance of the police into the engine room ended things in a hurry.

One of the engineers is in Long Island College hospital, where doctors are seeking to determine whether his skull is fractured, three members of the crew have been treated for cuts, bruises and lacerations, as have the other engineers, and many other sailors, firemen and oilers are cut and bruised.

FAIL TO AGREE ON JUDGE FOR CANAL BOARD TRIALS

Attorneys representing Timothy J. Crowe, former president of the sanitary district board, and the other indicted former trustees will report to Chief Justice McGoorty tomorrow that they have been unble to agree with Assistant State's Attorney John E. Northup on a trial judge. It is reported that the prosecutors and defense attorneys will ask more time to confer on this subject.

When the sanitary district cases were placed on the call several weeks ago following a report of the September grand jury calling attention to the fact that the cases have not been tried, a continuance was granted to give the attorneys an opportunity to see if a trial judge could be agreed on. This would obviate, it was explained, many continuances through possible changes of venue inasmuch as there are 18 defendants in the case.

Chief Justice McGoorty at the time announced that if a judge was not selected he would arbitrarily assign the case to some judge. Whether he will take such action tomorrow in view of the expected report could not be determined.

SHIP CARRIES 19 TO DEATH WITHIN SIGHT OF SHORE

Plunges to Bottom as She Reaches Haven.

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 8.—[U. P.]—The sinking of the steam schooner Brooklyn in Humboldt bay late today, with a probable death toll of 19, climaxed a week filled with hazard for those who work in ships plying the 1,000 mile waterline of the Pacific coast.

Capt. William Garner, coast guardsman, stationed at Humboldt bay, heard four sharp blasts of distress from the vessel and then saw it roll over after she passed the buoy, just inside the bay. The vessel drifted about 500 yards before she turned over, he said. Within 20 minutes the waters of the bay had closed over her.

No Hope of Survivors.

There is slight if any possibility that Capt. J. F. Tufverson and his crew of 18 men escaped, according to Garner.

Immediately after the sinking Garner manned a coast guard boat and started a search for bodies. After a two hour hunt no trace of a body or the wreckage of the vessel had been found.

The Brooklyn was heavily loaded with lumber en route from Eureka to San Francisco. She was built at Aberdeen, Wash., in 1901. She was a wooden steamer 137 feet long and had a gross tonnage of 233.

Crew Saved; Ship Sinks.

West Palm Beach, Fla., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Rescued shortly before their schooner sank in a storm, the crew of the four masted Dunham Wheeler was en route tonight to New York aboard the steamer Aztec. A call for help sent by the freighter Upshur, herself in distress, made possible the rescue.

HOLDUP SUSPECT BREAKS JAIL.

Anderson, Ind., Nov. 8.—[U. P.]—Sawing a bar from a cell, "Little Mike" Davis of Muncie, wanted here on a robbery charge, escaped from jail at Danville, Ill., Anderson authorities have been advised. He is accused of holding up William Woolums and Charles Mee, taking money and jewelry.

SHERIFF AND SIX OTHERS ARE SEIZED ON DRY CHARGES

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Federal prohibition agents early today arrested seven persons, including, they said, the sheriff and sheriff elect of Lowndes county at Hayneville. They are charged with conspiracy to violate the national prohibition act.

The seven men were brought here and bonds for all except two Negroes, caught in the raids were set at $15,000. Bond for the Negroes, who were charged with possession, was set at $500.

The officers said those arrested were Sheriff Morrow Willoughby, Buck Meadows, sheriff elect; Leon West, a deputy sheriff, H. N. Patterson, and Wilbur Winn, all of Hayneville.

James W. Shields of New Orleans, federal prohibition agent, who said he had spent thirty days in Lowndes county gathering evidence, said he led the raiding party.

Shields, according to United States District Attorney Grady Reynolds here reported that he had made purchases of liquor direct from Sheriff Willoughby while posing as a racketeer from St. Louis and last night set a trap for the officer.

Shields said he arranged for a meeting at a Negro shack in Hayneville and that Deputy West appeared and a deal was closed for delivery of forty gallons. Shields said when arrested a short time later, West had in his possession $200 in marked bills passed in completing the deal.

Both Meadows and Willoughby, who made bond, denied any conspiracy existed and each declared he was at home asleep when officers came to arrest him.

FIERCE STORM HOLDS AQUITANIA BACK 18 HOURS

New York, Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Eighteen hours late as a result of three days of heavy winds and huge waves, the Cunard liner Aquitania arrived in port today with 732 passengers and a crew who agreed the storms on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday were the worst in their experience.

The captain announced that no damage had been done to the ship.

Bernard McAvery, for twenty years a ships' photographer, told ship news reporters the storm was the most violent he had ever experienced.

BACK TO REPUBLICANISM.

The fallacy that a great political party can insure for itself an indefinite continuance of power and office by borrowing the policies of its opponents has been, as we said the other day, exploded in the late national election. No doubt the sharp slump in national prosperity, throwing millions out of employment, cutting dividends and filling the public mind with vague alarms, would have reduced Republican strength without the assistance of other complications. But discontent with Republican administration is not merely or even chiefly an unreasoning reaction from the business depression. It is wider and deeper. When the shock came it found the Republican rank and file bewildered and protesting because of a leadership which was bartering for Democratic votes at the expense of Republican principles and Republican responsibilities.

As we have said, the administration was carrying the banner of Bryanism. In spite of the unmistakable warnings of huge national victories against experiments in international commitment, the administration was persistently tampering with our strength and independence in international affairs. It was showing Bryanism in foreign policy, Bryanism in prohibition, Bryanism in economic regulations. The situation was one of the most remarkable in party history. Looking at the party leadership during the last two years it has been impossible to recognize it as Republican without the label. And labels in such a time as this go for nothing.

The political significance of the election is clear enough. The warning to Republican leadership is to get back to Republicanism. Republicanism has always been for a strong nation, for sound economics, for the development of prosperity through individual energy and initiative, for its protection from half-baked experiments and cureals, for liberty under law. Republican leadership should express the loyalty of the party to American principles and ideals, should stop at once the harrying of citizens by political inquisitors and official assassins. It must repudiate the whole Volstead régime of fanatical interference in private life, with its confiscation of property, its evasion of jury trial, its building up of a bureaucratic tyranny all the more offensive to the healthy American conscience because dressed in the garb of morality and religion. It must put a stop to the concessions of American right and the compromise of American strength in international affairs, a policy of gradual international entanglement which has no sanction from the party or the people of the nation. It must get back to solid economics, respect for the lessons of business experience and for careful deliberation before political action.

Republican success purchased by a surrender to Bryanism, Cannonism, the fundamentalism, ignorance, and bigotry of backward districts would be worse than defeat. And it has brought not success but defeat.

What is needed now is a courageous reaffirmation of real Republicanism, a reassertion of American constitutional principles and their guaranties of the rights of the individual, in person and in property. No leadership which leaves that solid foundation will be followed or ought to be followed. The Republican party has justified the faith of the people for three generations because its principles and its policies have built up the welfare of the American nation within the limits of ordered liberty. It has protected and sustained the freeman and bid him go forward to ever enlarging accomplishment. It has not gone astray after fallacious doctrines. Its mistakes have been limited and corrected by sound and farseeing principles. It has not bartered American traditions but has sustained them through the years.

The duty of Republican leadership today is to return to Republicanism and to the American principles of liberty, assailed by the bigot, and to the solid wisdom of its constructive economic policies, which the radical experimenter attacks. Republican leadership owes it to the party and to the nation to lead against organized bigotry, against the drift to foreign entanglements, against the expanding powers of bureaucracy and the persistent invasion of the rights and responsibilities of the American freeman.

WAR MEMORIALS.

Mr. Kipling has replied to the British government's move for a letup in the ceremonies at the tomb of the unknown soldier in Westminster (the placing of wreaths by distinguished visitors) with a poem, "Memories," published in one of the London papers. Its content is described as bitter native. Kipling lost a son. The explanation given for Mr. MacDonald's government was that it was desirable to permit war emotions to recede. The offering at the tomb had become a part of ceremonial routine, but Mr. MacDonald evidently concluded it was too much on the side of bitterness. That idea lacks apparent probability. Such genuine sentiment as prompted the paying of respect probably was of the purer emotions and it may be doubted that the explanation was itself genuine.

A pacifist inclination would find in the tokens of respect given this military symbol in any land too much suggestion of unpleasantness and too much glorification given the sacrifice which it involved. A disposition to deny for the future what has been proved in experience would favor the removal of the vestiges of that experience, particularly as they implied credit to the victims or the survivors and had any response from general sentiment.

People will not remember with any desire to repeat. International relations are not made bitter by the respect which nations give the memory of men who have suffered or served in war. In the course of time the respect becomes international and enemies pool their memories. The pacifist feeling is that this is admiration of an evil and that war as an evil involves its actors in the turpitude inherent in itself.

The world war was first of all a bankruptcy of European governments, and the tomb of the unknown soldier is a memorial in a very true sense of that failure. The permission which those governments had to exist might indict the peoples, but the authority was ancient and protected by the inertia of masses. Even the representative government of Great Britain had muddled its approaches to the crisis, and even in the United States the government of a democracy did much to make a possibility an inevitability.

Abuses of a war memorial which gratify the donor of a wreath rather than convey a sentiment to the dead could be repressed, but in the case of Great Britain, as in the case of the United States, there is a pacifist feeling that tokens of experience should be taken from the background because they are admonitory of things to be denied.

MODERN DESPAIR.

Though young despair may often turn to middle aged complacency, the source of discontent and futilitarianism in much modern poetry and criticism still deserves consideration. The prose of Hemingway and Joyce and Aldous Huxley, the poetry of T. S. Elliot and others can record, if nothing more, a young man's disillusionment and his cynicism and hatred towards the old ways and values that have failed him. It is more, perhaps, than adolescent gloom. That many others, even a youthful generation, it may be, feel as he does is evident from the vogue that these writers have.

The war's hypocrisies and shouting and the Versailles peace was a shock, no doubt, that broke the faith of many in our standardized conventions of morality and religion. The social shift and churning of the last score years further uprooted the young trees. "Those who have lived long," says James Truslow Adams, "have for the most part become either reconciled or hopeless over the situation. But for the young it is different, fortunately. They see the poverty, the social injustice, the frequent emotional maladjustment between the individual and society, and they do not see, and let us hope that they are right, that such things need always be." But in others of the younger group there is less comeback and resilience. Science has come, and for the first time is bred deeply into the imaginative context of a new generation, and the drive of business and materialistic civilization breaks the dreams of a century before. All this was heaped upon the young literary generation, and a feeling of futility was a sure result. In terms of the old values, of old culture and sensitivity, modern life is harsh and oversimple. The low vitality and hopelessness of much modern work, the hard sophistication and indifference of much poetry and prose of today, comes of resentment at the passing of dreams held dear.

The despair and bitterness at defeat of human values and refinements by the overwhelming rush of modern energies and machines, shown in Krutch's book, "The Modern Temper," for example, is a gesture of implacable refusal to accept what seems inevitable defeat. It is a hopeless though fighting book. But the roar of life goes on regardless, and the intensity of modern living finds little literary expression. This is the key, perhaps, to modern young despair. Bred in a culture alien to the modern age, these literary men are blind or partly blind to the vital values in the flood and surge of life around them. Bred in a European intellectualism now broken and unsuited to a modern age, nurtured in an aristocratic culture laid educationally from above upon the soil of modern times, they seek faint, far fires and know little of the mighty burning all about them.

Life abounding has been produced in modern America, and, for all its casualness and brutality, it can be raw material of great poetry and expression. But a conscious culture imposed upon the west from sophisticated Europe can hardly cope with it. Such culture is pinched off and starved, and those who represent it fall in despair. Bitter our art may be, but with Whitman, Jeffers, Sandburg and other of the sort arising from the native stuff and substance of America our art will move beyond despair. It will be strong, confident with action.

Editorial of the Day

TWO THOUSAND YEARS AGO AND TODAY.

[Manchester Guardian.]

Vergil lived, like ourselves, in a time when the world was taut in a desperate struggle to get on to a new set of rails. As a young man he watched the last agonies of the Roman republic as it died on swallowing a world too big for its digestion. As he grew older he watched Octavian—later to be, deservedly, surnamed Augustus—fashioning out of a broken framework of life something durable and workable, some machinery of equilibrium, which would make it possible for the affairs of state to recapture the stable and predictable march of natural things. And he saw, as we are beginning to see today, that stability and permanence do not rest essentially in an attempt to go back, to build up on the old traditions, the old certainties. The mechanism of government which Augustus built to meet the new mood of the world was in its time a novelty, a daring experiment. Vergil watched it with the quiet eyes of a countryman who has the round of the seasons ever before him and sees the immutable order which is the background of all these strivings hither and thither when mankind is off the rails. It was not his fashion to chronicle directly the events of his day. But with the one hand he drew, in the "Æneid," the allegory of that long climb from anarchy to stability, and with the other—it is essential that the two be comprehended together—he drew, in his "Georgics," the pattern of the changeless round of the year, upon which that stability must ultimately rest. The base of all empires and all governments is that there is a time to sow and a time to reap, linked in a rhythm as majestic and as inflexible as Vergil's own hexameter. So he accepted and upheld the new traditions based not on the old outworn traditions, but on the solid earth which he knew and loved so well.

AMERICAN HEROES

JOHANN DE KALB

A Brief Review of His Contribution to Our Country.

(The articles of which the following is the twenty-fifth are intended as five minute sketches of early Americans of particular achievement and distinction, each flashed briefly against the background of the times and conditions in which the subject made his contribution to the nation. Their names may be well or may be little known now to the generation which has inherited the benefits of wise, laborious, and in many instances heroic work.)

(Picture in Rotogravure Section.)

THE American revolution was opportunely set between two major upheavals in Europe. The continent was adjusting itself after contact with Frederick the Great's ambitions and was waiting, unknowing, for the French revolution. The seven years' war did considerable to hasten the revolt of the British colonies. Their success in revolt had something to do with the precipitation of the French revolution.

Ideas were volatile. The speculative world was busy with them. Soldiering was an elegant profession, for officers and soldiers were idle. Enthusiasms were romantic. Liberty was an ideal sentimentally cherished in lands where there was none and even by aristocrats. Bright swords and laces, restless swords, and shabby uniforms were eager for adventure or for subsistence. German principalities and duchies had an idle labor commodity in their recruits, and the princes needed money for opera, mistresses, and their imitations of Versailles. The brilliant ideology of the American revolutionists and their military inexperience attracted gallant or needy soldiers whose hands were free and whose courage was bright, or whose necessities were great and whose prospects were dismal. America was offered their services so urgently that it became an embarrassment and required an embargo. Great Britain drew upon the German reservoir and the French gave America their help. Thus it happened that American battlefields record so many notable European military names—Lafayette, Rochambeau, Berthier, Von Steuben, Kosciusko, Pulaski, De Kalb, and others familiar to general American history, with scores of others whose names have faded out.

Some of the soldiers of fortune or fighters for ideals were birds of storm, but many were unselfishly devoted to the American cause, giving it their fortunes and their lives. Von Steuben sacrificed his property and died in a log cabin in New York. Pulaski gave his life at the siege of Savannah. De Kalb died of eleven wounds at the battle of Camden.

Johann de Kalb was born at Huttendorf, Bavaria, July 29, 1721. He had military experience in Europe, chiefly with the French army, which he entered in 1743. He served through the seven years' war and came out of it with the rank of major general. In 1768 he was sent to America as a secret agent of the French government, and that visit accounts for his subsequent service in the revolutionary army. Like John Paul Jones it was his acquaintance with the colonies and with the American people and their ideas that made him sympathetic and eager to be of service when military service was needed. Jones began his affectionate association with the colonial people at the age of eleven, De Kalb in middle life, but the consequences of these attachments were similar.

De Kalb had many warm friends in America before it was committed to the struggle for independence, and when that event came he was ready to return and offer his service. It was at this time that Lafayette determined that his ideals and ambitions lay in the revolutionary cause in the British colonies. Through Silas Deane, the American agent in Paris, Lafayette arranged on Dec. 7, 1776, to enter the American service as a major-general, but before further steps could be taken the news of the Long Island disaster to the American army reached Paris and the American envoys, Franklin and Arthur Lee, discouraged his going and the king forbade it. This resulted in his well known adventure in disobeying the king's orders and going without leave. He was arrested in Bordeaux but, the ship having been taken by its British captors to a Spanish port, Lafayette escaped in disguise, boarded another vessel, and was able to reach Georgetown, S. C. De Kalb was one of the officers in the small party which accompanied him.

One serious difficulty which the distinguished foreign volunteers created for the American command was in their assumption of major commissions. Frequently their unquestionable abilities fairly dictated these appointments, but in each case promotion was closed so far as American ambitions were concerned. This promoted jealousies and tended to discourage the colonial soldiers, who were naturally eager that their service, if deserving and brilliant, should lead to some of the expectable military honors and distinctions. The conflict between European professional ability and native ambitions so greatly worried Washington that he frequently wished he had never seen a foreign officer, although he fully and affectionately appreciated the service of such men as Lafayette, Von Steuben, Kosciusko, and others whose worth, devotion, and loyalty he never had cause to question.

In spite of these difficulties, De Kalb was appointed a major general and for the first part of his service in America was attached to Washington, experiencing the deprivations at Valley Forge following the operations about Philadelphia which failed to prevent capture of the then capital of the Confederation. After this terrible winter he was in the operations involving the retreat of the British to New York and the battle of Monmouth, which failed to intercept it. When the war was carried into the south De Kalb was ordered to reinforce Gen. Lincoln at Charleston. Before he could arrive he learned of the surrender of the city and the loss of Lincoln's army, which had been held within the town in an effort to defend it rather than being extricated for further service in the field.

De Kalb joined Gates, the general in command of the surviving American army in the south, at Camden, S. C., in August, 1780, just in time to be involved in the final collapse of that general's reputation and pretensions. The victory at Saratoga had carried Gates along until he met Cornwallis and Rawdon on this disastrous scene. De Kalb had 1,400 Maryland and Delaware regulars, rated on past performance as among the best troops of the continental army. Washington had wanted Greene to take command in the south, but Gates was still a full fledged legend and the popular demand was for him. Consequently congress had given him the post. At Camden, Gates was completely misinformed as to his enemy's strength. He was undertaking to surprise Rawdon, whom he supposed to have a small body of troops, not knowing that Cornwallis had effected a juncture and that he was to meet an enemy in superior numbers. Half of Gates' force, nominally 3,000 men, was of untried militia and many were helpless with camp ailments. When the truth of the enemy's strength was disclosed De Kalb wished to fall back to a defensible position, but was overruled and Gates deployed his men to fight. De Kalb with the Delaware and Maryland troops held the right wing opposite Rawdon. Gates ordered a charge, which threw his own men into confusion, and upon a countercharge they gave up the attempt to reform their ranks and fled. Only De Kalb's troops held the field and they did so until they were taken, not only in the flank but in the rear. The Delaware troops were almost annihilated and the Maryland regiments lost half their number.

The desperateness of the resistance offered by De Kalb in this shocking disaster to the American army in the south is shown not only by the casualties in his ranks but by the fact that he was wounded eleven times and when taken was dying.

A monument to his memory was placed at Camden in 1825. Lafayette laid the cornerstone of this memorial to his old comrade in arms.

PLAYING IN THE CITY.

A LARGE printing establishment occupies a building that has a flat roof. The floor of the roof is made of concrete and it is carried on strong supports. The roof space is occupied with courts for play. There are tennis courts, courts for volleyball, and courts for various other sports.

The employés are encouraged to spend the noon hours and other rest periods on this roof engaged in competitive play. There is sunshine there when there is any to be had anywhere, and nobody is killed by an automobile when he chases a ball that goes out of bounds. This factory is located near the center of the city. The price of ground makes it necessary to save on space, and what there is the automobile makes use of. Luckily, aviation has not progressed to the point where roof tennis players are in danger of being knocked off by flying machines.

A large hotel has set up a miniature golf course. Another large hotel has converted its flat roof into an uncovered roof garden; not an equipped roof with windows, tables, and all needed protection for serving food and drink in an artificial atmosphere, but a simple, roofless, open air inclosure into which guests may go for a little sunshine and fresh air in the midst of the city, but away from street noises and street gases. Several large hotels and many large apartment buildings have roof apartments in which the chosen few can live away from some of the city turmoil.

A Chicago resident, traveling widely last summer, talked with many people about his city and its reputation. More than one spoke with admiration of the spirit responsible for bathing beaches located in the very center of the city and used by hundreds of thousands daily for swimming and sun bathing. Others spoke of the ball fields right in the loop. These opportunities for promotion of health give the city a good reputation to antidote that bestowed by racketeers.

CHANGE YOUR DIET.

Mrs. A. H. writes: I have large canker sores in my mouth. As soon as one leaves another comes. I have discontinued all acid foods, but have not been helped. Would these in time cause cancer?

REPLY.

There is no relation between cankers of the mouth and cancer. There is relation between them and diet. There is no evidence that eating sour foods is the cause. Cure is effected by changing the diet and some of the digestive habits.

BULGING OF FOOD CANS.

L. A. M. writes: Is it true that when canned goods are no good the cans bulge? I have had quite a bit of canned goods on hand for about six months and am somewhat leary of using them. They were stored on a shelf over my refrigerator, which threw quite a bit of heat. I thought perhaps the heat would cause the goods to spoil.

REPLY.

Bulging of the can is one sign of spoiling and a very good one. However, occasionally the contents of a can will spoil without causing bulging. Sometimes the product is edible even though the can has bulged. Open some cans and judge of the condition by odor and appearance. It is usually safe to taste, though botulinus may be too deadly for that. Fortunately, botulinus in commercial canned goods is now exceedingly rare. If you are suspicious, try the contents on chickens, cats, or dogs.

NOT DANGEROUS TO LIFE.

Miss A. C. writes: Is hay fever dangerous? How long does it last? What are the symptoms?

REPLY.

There is no danger to life. There is some danger of asthma and chronic bronchitis. As a rule, it lasts until a good frost falls. The symptoms are those of a bad cold with much sneezing, watery nose, discharge, redness of eyes, itching, and other symptoms of irritation.

MEDICAL FEES.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Had an operation in Illinois involving removal of appendix and gall bladder draining, this being an emergency case and the first available doctor was called. He called in another doctor to perform the operation, whose charge for same I know would be less than one-half of the bill of $300 which the first doctor sent me. 1. By paying $5 each month on this bill, what action, if any, could he take to make me pay more? I. J. G.

1. No payment of less than the full amount due will protect you from court procedure. If you feel that you could satisfy a court that the charge is unreasonable you should make no payments until an adjustment has been secured. Another doctor can advise you better than we can as to the reasonableness of the bill.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

QUESTION OF DATE.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—[Friend of the People.]—My parents arrived in this country when I was 4 years old. My mother took out her naturalization papers and became a citizen after I was 21 years of age and married to an American citizen. Am I or am I not an American citizen? If I am not, please advise me as to where and how I can obtain my naturalization. J. H.

If the writer married an American citizen before Sept. 22, 1922, she became a citizen through such marriage; but if the marriage occurred after that date she did not gain citizenship, but must be naturalized. If she desires to become a citizen the necessary application may be obtained at this office, room 778 postoffice building.

FRED J. SCHLOTFELDT,
District Director, U. S. Dept. of Labor.

LICENSE TO MANUFACTURE.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—1. Is it necessary to have a license from the city of Chicago to manufacture a product in the home? 2. In a small factory? 3. May orders be solicited without a license? 4. If so, how soon may deliveries be made? 5. May products be retailed from the home without a license? L. E. N.

1. and 2. Not on the bare facts stated.
3. Yes.
4. The only limitation is that you must not make delivery a part of the same transaction unless you have a peddler's license.
5. In general, yes. We could advise to better advantage if you had stated the nature of the business.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

NOW THAT HALLOWEEN IS OVER, WE CAN CONCENTRATE ON THANKSGIVING

FROM THE TRIBUNE'S COLUMNS

16 YEARS AGO TODAY

NOVEMBER 9, 1914.

ROME.—It has been learned from a diplomatic source that the Russians have succeeded in separating the German and Austrian armies, besides enveloping the left flank of the Austrians and cutting off their retreat to Cracow. The defeated Austrians, numbering 1,500,000 men, are now retiring across the Carpathian mountains into Hungary. They are abandoning their supplies, ammunition, and ambulance trains and automobiles in the narrow snow covered mountain passes in their headlong flight.

LONDON.—The allies, who for two weeks have been hurling back furious attacks by the Germans in Belgium and northern France, have taken the offensive and made important advances. The losses have been terrific. Around Ypres alone the German casualties are reported at 100,000. In the Aisne valley, around Soissons, the allies have regained the ground which the Germans had taken from them. The Belgians, who are holding the line reaching to the coast, have also made progress.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Assurances that there "is nothing alarming" in conditions at Vera Cruz were given in a cablegram from Brig. Gen. Funston to Secretary Garrison. Rumors of possible attacks on American outposts had caused Mr. Garrison to ask for information as to the situation.

CHICAGO.—Miss Editha Walbridge Hardy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Hardy of Evanston, and Archibald Belmont Young of Louisville were married on Nov. 7 at St. Mark's Episcopal church by the Rev. Arthur Rogers, assisted by the Rev. Reuben Kidner of Trinity church, Boston.

30 YEARS AGO TODAY

NOVEMBER 9, 1900.

CHICAGO.—Gambling on horse races without let or hindrance almost at the doors of residents of Oak Park is assured to the owners of the Harlem and Hawthorne race tracks by the action of the Cicero town board in separating the latter track from the government of the township. The action ends an eight year fight by merely shifting the responsibility from the shoulders of the trustees. It is rumored that the track may be annexed to the town of Lyons. Cicero's move is a complete victory for the gamblers.

NEW YORK.—While William A. Clark has swept Montana in the elections, overwhelming decisively his lifelong rival, Marcus Daly, the Montana "copper king," Daly lies in the Hotel Netherland here near death. He was delirious tonight but rallied somewhat toward midnight.

OMAHA, Neb.—The returns are now complete enough to convince the most skeptical that McKinley carried Nebraska at Tuesday's election by from 5,000 to 7,000 votes.

50 YEARS AGO TODAY

NOVEMBER 9, 1880.

NEW YORK.—Sara Bernhardt made her first appearance before the American public at Booth's theater in the character of Adrienne Lecouvreur, the part in which Rachel made her last appearance upon the American stage about a quarter of a century ago. She had one of the most elegant audiences that could well be gathered together and was given a spontaneous and sincere reception.

MARSEILLES.—The siege of the abbey of the Tremontre Fathers continues and troops still surround the monastery. The subprefect states that the authorities do not intend to break open the doors, but will continue the siege for a month, if necessary. The Fathers declare they have sufficient provisions and will not yield. At Cambery the Trappists of Tamie were dispersed on Nov. 6 by seven brigades of gendarmerie and fifty troops of the line. At Mantes the Capuchins have embarked for Cork.

CHICAGO.—A notable reception was given by Mr. and Mrs. George F. Harding at their home, 2536 Indiana avenue, the occasion being the celebration of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. Mr. Harding is a prominent lawyer and he and his wife are well and widely known in social circles.

LOUISVILLE.—Whisky was firm and in fair demand here and at Cincinnati at $1.08 per gallon.

JUDGMENT ON COLLEGE GRADUATES.

Chicago, Oct. 27.—About fifteen months ago an article appeared in the papers about Prof. Rogers of Boston Tech, who urged graduates of that school to be snobs, to dress well, and marry the boss' daughter. He said that was the way to succeed. The professor's philosophy has been very much in my mind ever since, a period during which I have hired and trained more than two hundred salesmen, about half being college graduates. I have found college men, as a whole, to be the dumbest, most egotistic, half baked portions it has ever been my misfortune to deal with. They mistake words for thoughts, opinions for deeds, and dress for personality. They have a passion for toying with words, especially the six cylinder variety. A pun to them is the height of brains. They have an idea that a diploma makes their opinions sacred, and thus filled with divinity, they pose for the edification of the "uneducated," instead of going out for results. With them dress is triple personality. Spats, gloves, and slick hair take the place of courage and character. The world marvels at the successes achieved by our Henry Fords, Al Smiths, Marshall Fields, and others who started as poor boys without schooling. After a prolonged inspection of the jellyfish competition these leaders have had to contend with, I don't see how they could have failed.

A SALES MANAGER.

SPECULATION BY GOVERNMENTS.

Chicago, Nov. 5.—Again I wish to commend THE TRIBUNE for its fair-minded discussion of the farmers' problem. I refer to your editorial, "Pity the Canadian Farmer."

The reason Canada has not fared as well as the American farmer is that Canada has experimented for over six years with pool operations, endeavoring to stabilize farm prices, and failed miserably, whereas Uncle Sam has been at it only a year and a half. Fewer restrictions on speculative trading might be of far more value to the American farmers than anything that has been done thus far; at least it is worth trying.

READER.

A LONG WAY FROM WALDEN.

Evanston, Ill., Oct. 27.—Last night, while musingly walking down a rather dark street that was free from buildings and people, I was stopped, searched, and questioned by an Evanston police flying squad to explain my incomprehensible action. When I tried to inform them that I enjoyed such meanderings before going to bed they nearly decided to take me to a psychopathic hospital to find out what was wrong with my upper story. It made me wonder what the famous essayists, Thoreau, Stevenson, and Hazlitt, would have answered them had they been in my place.

MAC D. LASKY.

AFTER AN ACCIDENT.

Chicago, Oct. 24.—It was the lot of the writer to witness a most inhuman exhibition of public utility management on the morning of Friday, Oct. 24. Near the junction of Western boulevard and Western avenue a street car struck an elderly man and threw him to the curb, causing him to hit his head on the pavement and rendering him unconscious, with the blood gushing from his head in profusion.

The street car crew permitted the victim to remain in his prostrate position. The writer approached the motorman and asked him if he were not going to do something for the injured man. The reply was in effect that he was to mind his company's business and get the names of witnesses. The writer lost control of his ordinary usual speech, and wishes to apologize to the stricken man and also to the crowd of onlookers who were within earshot.

The writer suggests that the Surface Lines instruct their crews to be more humane in the future and to care for their victims first, instead of letting innocent bystanders care for and attend the sufferer as was necessary in the above case. JOSEPH W. GRADY.

DISCOVERY.

Chicago, Oct. 26.—It is my impression that the young women of today know nothing of housework or cooking, nor do they seem to have any desire to learn. Recently I visited a relative who has grown daughters. Those girls did not do a thing around the house and seemed surprised to see me with an apron helping their mother do the washing, making beds, and cooking, and it impressed them so that they presented me with an apron when my visit ended. Now, young ladies, laugh that off if you can. G. MOLLOY.

CITY LIFE.

Chicago, Oct. 24.—An article in today's paper reminded me of my experience of a few weeks ago. While sitting peacefully on a Kedzie avenue street car I was suddenly struck with something directly in the eye. My glasses were broken and the eye was black for several days. Imagine my embarrassment when I found I had been hit with a nice ripe tomato. Even if I could make any one believe my story I was lucky that it wasn't a bag of dirty water. D. CHARTERSON.

HINDENBURG.

Chicago, Oct. 25.—E. Hofer in his letter on the editorial on Hindenburg expresses my views and I would suggest to your newspaper to have this editorial translated into the German language and copies mailed not only to all American newspapers published in the German language but to all prominent publications in Germany as well; which in my humble opinion would be of great value to both countries. P. J. ROSS.

SOUTH AMERICA'S UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM

[Providence Bulletin.]

RIOTS BREAK OUT IN GERMANY AS WAGES ARE CUT

Workers in an Uproar; Preach Revolt.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Nov. 8.—For three hours tonight, workers, stirred up by communists, at Stuttgart battled with police. The latter were trying to prevent a demonstration against the Bruening cabinet after it had become known that the board of arbitration, appointed by the government to settle the wage scale of the metal workers, had decreed a wage cut of from 8 to 8 per cent, starting in January. Up to midnight a score or more had been wounded in the disturbances.

Throughout Germany labor unions and all workers' associations are in an uproar over the arbitration decree, and some of their leaders are openly threatening revolt unless the government enforces a reduction in the prices of food, corresponding to the wage cuts.

Rejected First Decree.

The first arbitration decree in the metal industry last month provided for a 6 to 8 per cent wage cut. More than 140,000 workers went on strike. The government, promising a revision, induced the labor unions to promise to accept the decision of the new arbitrators, regardless of what their decision might be.

The new decree provides for a 3 per cent reduction in wages until Jan. 19. Then workers under 18 years of age will receive a 6 per cent cut and adults an 8 per cent cut. The workers declare this will be only a few weeks' postponement of the original decree.

The government declares that by January its campaign to cut food prices will be successful, and that the purchasing power of the reduced wage will have increased.

Radicals Preach Revolt.

The workers do not believe this promise and tonight communist and national Socialist [Fascist] agitators are being cheered in the labor sections. Many Socialists are abandoning their labor union leaders to listen to the preaching of sedition and revolt.

Thousands listened to a speech by the communist leader, Pieck, broadcast from Moscow in honor of the celebrations attending the thirteenth anniversary of the October revolution of the soviet republic.

"Next year this time Germany will be able to look back upon a German equivalent to the Russians' October revolution," Pieck said. "We will not stand for the present order for twelve months more. Germany is preparing to rise soon."

The speech was received secretly since the German stations were trying to drown out the propaganda, which came pouring steadily in the German language from the Moscow station. The Reds had small but powerful relaying stations retransmitting the Moscow speeches.

Heads Association

PROF. A. B. MAYS.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Practical training to meet the needs of home life was advocated yesterday in the closing sessions of the Illinois Vocational association's convention in the Hotel Sherman. Approximately 3,000 teachers from Illinois' schools were in attendance.

At yesterday's business meeting Prof. A. B. Mays of the department of industrial education of the University of Illinois was elected president.

"Growing emphasis of the importance of the new vocational idea in the schools is laying the foundation for the realities of life," declared William J. Bogan, superintendent of Chicago public schools. Nellie F. Ryan, principal of the north side group of continuation schools told of the work of the Winchell continuation school where more than 1,000 girls are being taught to beautify their homes and care for babies.

NOV. 21 IS MADE LAST DAY FOR 1929 TAX COMPLAINTS

Taxpayers will be given until Nov. 21 to file complaints on their 1929 real estate assessments, the board of review decided yesterday. The first public hearing will be held on Nov. 24. The meeting was the first held by the board in the last five months. Present were Charles V. Barrett and William H. Weber, who was defeated for reelection last Tuesday.

The reviewers announced that the penalty date on 1929 taxes, which was set, for Feb. 1, 1931, by the recent special session of the legislature, probably will have to be extended to April 1. They pointed out that the assessment books, which were scheduled to be turned over by the board of assessors on Aug. 11, were not delivered until last Friday.

AUSTRIAN POLICE CURB RIOTS ON EVE OF ELECTION

Three Cornered Fight to Rule Parliament Ends.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

VIENNA, Austria, Nov. 8.—Crowds of Fascists in feathered mountaineer hats and their hated political enemies, the Socialists, wearing patent leather visored caps, paraded Vienna streets tonight. The marchers carrying torches were making a final appeal for support tomorrow, when Austria will elect a new parliament.

Police dashed here and there trying to prevent a clash of the hostile private armies, realizing that, if either the Fascists (Heimwehr) or the Socialists (Schutzbund) met, a riot would follow. Up until midnight the perspiring policemen had succeeded in the keeping the foes apart.

Few Changes Predicted.

Although the two militant political foes have engaged in several bloody riots during the campaign, 6,000,000 Austrians are hoping that the election will pass peacefully.

But despite the intensity of the campaign, the election will fail to materially change the political proportions of parliament, according to almost unanimous opinion. Even the headquarters of the three chief parties predict only slight changes.

Besides the two powerful Fascist and Socialist parties, there is a third, the Schober bloc, formed after former Chancellor Schober's cabinet was overthrown on Sept. 25.

The present government's chief spokesman has been Dr. Ignaz Seipel, a Catholic prelate and a former chancellor. Karl Vaugoin became chancellor after a brief career as a minor politician. The third member of this triumvirate is Prince Ernest Rudiger von Starhemberg, minister of the interior and Austria's "Adolf Hitler."

Schober Powerful Foe.

Their most powerful foe today is Schober, the gray haired Vienna police chief, whose bloc represents the moderate elements between the extremes of Nationalist and Socialist parties.

Schober returned to Vienna tonight following a swing around the country and was received with an enthusiastic ovation. In his final campaign speech he jibed at the youthful Prince von Starhemberg's recent activity in raiding the Socialists for arms. He declared that both parties must disarm immediately following the election. He also reminded the Austrians that they must not forget their chief goal, namely a union with Germany.

WOMAN HELD AS WOMAN'S SLAYER.

Mrs. Josephine Bennett, colored, 4538 Indiana avenue, was held to the grand jury on a charge of murder by a coroner's jury yesterday in connection with the fatal stabbing of Juanita Hughes, also colored, of 4531 Indiana avenue.

FATE OF BRITISH ABILITY AS RULER AT STAKE IN INDIA

Round Table Conference to Open Wednesday.

BY JOHN STEELE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Next Wednesday in the royal gallery of the house of lords, King George will formally open the round table conference which is to decide the fate of India, and on which depends more than anything in recent years the test of whether Great Britain has lost her governing capacity.

The British and most of the Indians hope that a plan may be worked out by which India will become an equal member of the British commonwealth of nations, with complete freedom, such as in Canada, Ireland, and the other dominions. A comparatively small section of the Indians is calling for complete independence. This section is not represented at the coming conference.

Questions Up for Discussion.

Most of the delegates have now been in London for a fortnight. This time they have spent in preliminary work, carried on at meetings of the various sections of Indians. On the eve of the conference the following questions emerge as those which must be discussed:

1. The relationship between the British government and the princes of India, who are technically independent monarchs, allied by treaty with the king-emperor.

2. The relationship between the British government and British India. Will there be a dominion constitution for this area, and if so, what sort of safeguards will there be, and how long a transition period?

Hindu-Moslem Relations.

3. The relationship between the Indian states and British India. Will the princes bring their states into the federal government, and on what terms?

4. Central and provincial governments. If a dominion is established what will be the powers of each provincial government, and how will a liaison be operated?

5. Hindu-Moslem relations. The bitter hatred between these sections has poisoned public life in India since the beginning of political consciousness.

Princes Insist on Rights.

As a result of the preliminary meetings, it becomes apparent that a majority of the princes favor entering a federation of India with definite safeguards for their independence and privileges. They insist on keeping their contact with the king-emperor, and that such questions as succession to the throne, ceremonial and other factors, be dealt with by the viceroy as the emperor's personal representative. But they are willing to join in an all-India legislature to control ordinary administration.

All delegates from British India have agreed on a demand for full dominion status, but the problem of the transference of power from the British to the Indians presents difficulties which have not been surmounted. Disagreement is wide on the safeguards needed and on the length of the transition period.

Disagree on Princes' Power.

On the question of federation with the Indian states, the British Indians have agreed on its desirability. But again there is a difference of opinion over how much liberty is to be allowed to the princes. It is no secret that many Indian politicians are looking forward to offices in the rich all-India government, and are not favorable to any curtailment of their power by independent princes.

ACTRESS DIES

CLARE EAMES.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Nov. 8. — Clare Eames, noted American actress and equally famous here, died today in a nursing home following an operation. Following her success with James Hackett in "Macbeth" in New York she married the American playwright, Sidney Howard, and starred in Shaw's "Candida" and in "The Silver Cord" and "Ned McCobb's Daughter," productions of the Theater Guild, with which she was prominently connected. She was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1896 and had been on the stage since the age of 12. Early this year Mr. Howard had started divorce proceedings against Miss Eames. They have a daughter of four.

FIVE OF FAMILY ARE INJURED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Seven Hurt as Truck and Car Collide.

Seven persons, five members of one family, were injured last night in a collision between a truck and an auto at Cicero avenue and 185d street. They were taken to St. James' hospital in Chicago Heights where three of them were pronounced in serious condition.

The injured are: Patrick Boyen, 45 years old, and Frank Macino, 19, both of Matteson, and Mrs. Erna Amidie, 42 years old, of 6539 West 22d street, Berwyn, and her four children, Lawrence, 20; Emma, 18; Alfred, 9, and Theodore, 14. Boyen and Alfred and Theodore Amidie may die. Miss Eleanor Haut, 18 years old, 3712 Euclid avenue, Berwyn, who was riding with the Amidies, escaped injury.

Killed Crossing Drive.

A woman, identified by a letter found in her purse as Mrs. Anna Murphy, 2532 North Hamlin avenue, was struck by an automobile and killed late last night when she attempted to cross Lake Shore drive between Division and Elm streets. The driver, Fred Ammentorp, 28 years old, 3617 Indiana avenue, was held.

This death and five others yesterday increased the Cook county motor toll for the year to 915. The victims:

Henry Hausherr Jr., 5 years old, 1628 West 37th place. Died at Mother Cabrini hospital of injuries received earlier in the day when run down by a motor truck in front of his home. Albert Tranka, 2500 South Clifton Park avenue, the driver, was charged with reckless driving, but the boy's father announced he would not prosecute because the accident was unavoidable.

Adam Labryk, 32 years old, 812 North Sangamon street. Killed when struck by the automobile of Julius Wugsinski, 1336 Walton street, at Milwaukee avenue and Augusta street.

Patrick Doran, 52 years old. Died in the Alexian Brothers hospital of injuries received on Friday when struck by a truck.

Frank Fries, 57 years old, a mason of Lemont. Killed when struck by an automobile driven by a hit and run driver as he was crossing State street at Warner avenue in the village.

Michael Hanson, 55 years old, 6528 North Francisco avenue. Fatally injured when hit by an automobile driven by Robert Cooper, 57 years old, a real estate operator, 4149 Sheridan road, in front of 2345 Devon avenue. Cooper told the Summerdale police he did not see Hanson, but he felt the wheels of the car "roll over something" and stopped. Police believe Hanson collapsed on the street, which is poorly lighted.

Dr. Albert J. Schoenberg, 401 Fullerton parkway, was charged with manslaughter yesterday by a coroner's jury of Douglas county, Ill., following an automobile accident at Tuscola in which Roy Rudd, a farmer of Forest, was killed and four members of his family injured. Dr. Schoenberg was released last night on bond of $5,000.

According to Sheriff O. R. Twiford, the accident occurred when Dr. Schoenberg failed to stop at a through highway in Tuscola and rammed the machine of Rudd.

WILLS ESTATE OF TWO MILLIONS TO CATHOLIC CHURCH

Leaves Fund for Bishop to Distribute.

An estate of $2,000,000 is left almost entirely to Catholic organizations under the will of Martin Dawson, candy manufacturer, which was filed for probate yesterday with Mitchell C. Robin, clerk of the Probate court. Mr. Dawson died on Oct. 28 at the Congress hotel, where he lived. He was 86 years old and a bachelor.

The will, filed by the law firm of Winston, Strawn & Shaw, was written on Oct. 25. It leaves $300,000 to Cardinal Mundelein for the purpose of erecting a building to be dedicated to the Little Flower in memory of Mr. Dawson's father and mother, Martin and Celia Dawson.

$300,000 for New Church.

Another bequest of $300,000 is made to the Rev. Edward J. Mullaley, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic church, 9th street and Wabash avenue, to further the plans for a new church building. The Rev. Mr. Mullaley is also left $20,000 for his personal use.

Bequests of $35,000 are made to a niece, Mrs. Mary McHugh of Chicago, and to a number of friends. The remainder of the estate—about $1,300,000—is bequeathed to the Catholic bishop of Chicago, to be distributed as he shall direct. The will requests that Patrick J. Powers, Mr. Dawson's friend and associate, be intrusted with the management of the Martin Dawson company and be given the first opportunity to purchase the capital stock of the company, of which Mr. Dawson was the sole owner.

Founds Dawson Company.

MYRA HEDGES, 92, PIONEER CHURCH LEADER, IS DEAD

Mrs. Myra Clarke Hedges, 92 years old, who came to Chicago with her husband in 1865, died yesterday at the home of her son, Dr. Leroy C. Hedges, 6686 Olympia avenue, Edison Park.

She was the widow of William H. Hedges, who died in 1917 after nearly 40 years' service in the city engineer's office, and who was instrumental in preventing innumerable property disputes following the Chicago fire of 1871 when he turned over to the city a set of private notes he had kept of city surveys after the city's records had been lost.

The Ravenswood Congregational church was founded at a meeting in the Hedges home in 1870 and the Emmanuel Congregational church of Irving Park was the outgrowth of a Sunday school mission which the Hedges helped organize in 1896.

Two sons, Dr. Le Roy Clarke Hedges and Dr. Albert P. Hedges, and 12 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren survive.

START AUTOPSY IN SUDDEN DEATH AT COUNTY JAIL

A coroner's chemist yesterday began an examination of the vital organs of Daniel Hill, 37 years old, a prisoner in the county jail, who died Friday. He was awaiting trial for burglary. His case had been pending since last April because he was expected to be a state witness against several pawn brokers, who, it is alleged, bought the articles he had stolen. Hill was brought into court on Thursday and his case continued until the following day. He died suddenly before he could be brought into court again. The coroner is investigating at the request of Warden David Moneypenny to see whether Hill might have obtained and taken poison on his trip to court.

FORMER TEACHER WINS PROBATION AS SHOPLIFTER

The story of Mrs. Mary Warhurst, 40 years old, whom the hard times tossed her from a post in an Iowa university to shop lifting and a cell in the South State street station, won her probation yesterday from Judge Edgar A. Jonas. She was arrested last week as she left a State street store with stolen merchandise. Detectives found $300 worth of merchandise in her room at the Lorraine hotel, 411 South Wabash avenue.

Mrs. Warhurst sobbed as she told how she had once taught in the University of Iowa and Wesleyan college, Mount Pleasant, Ia., and how she and her husband came to Chicago from Des Moines in September to seek employment.

"I was given a position in an office at $30 a week, but after I had not been paid after three weeks, I learned that my employer did not expect to pay me. I wandered about the loop searching for a job. I was seized with a strange restlessness and felt I must keep moving or would collapse. It was then I started to pick up things from counters. I had no intention of selling them. Sometimes I was seized with nausea when I looked at them."

Mrs. Warhurst was turned over to friends who will care for her until she is able to find employment.

'FRAT BOY PRANK' TURNS OUT TO BE $1,500 ROBBERY

For almost three hours last night John Panoushis, 72 East 22d street, a wholesale banana merchant, sat in his parked automobile at West Adams and Aberdeen streets looking for all the world like a college fraternity initiate.

Over his head was a cloth sack, tied securely. His feet and hands were bound tightly. But to curious passers-by the banana merchant appeared to be in masquerade. Finally, George Centini, 1140 West Jackson boulevard, and Samuel Medico, 1153 Adams street, decided after a second look that there was something wrong. There was, to the amount of $1,500.

They released Panoushis, who, it was learned, had been kidnaped by two bandits, one a boy, in his car from in front of 706 South Halsted street, and taken to Aberdeen and Adams streets, where he was robbed of $1,500. The sack cowl was placed over his head, and his hands and feet were tied to prevent alarm and pursuit.

'LOHENGRIN' IS BEST IN HISTORY OF OPERA HERE

Critic Praises Cast and Stage Details.

LOHENGRIN.
Opera by Wagner. Sung by the Chicago Civic Opera company Saturday afternoon, Nov. 8.

THE CAST.

King Henry .....Alexander Kipnis
Lohengrin .....René Maison
Elsa of Brabant .....Lotte Lehmann
Telramund .....Hans Hermann Nissen
Ortrud .....Maria Olszewska
The king's herald .....Barre Hill
Conductor .....Egon Pollak
Stage director .....Dr. Otto Erhardt

BY EDWARD MOORE.

This is a highly honorable cast, and it gave quite the best performance of the work that has been given since Chicago began having its own opera company twenty years ago.

Some of the members had sung in it in seasons gone by, and were thus expected. One could anticipate the stately dignity of Mr. Kipnis as the king, the romance and fine singing of Mr. Maison in the name part, the perfidious impersonation of Mme. Olszewska, a sort of magnificent spider become operatically vocal, spinning her webs with a tincture of poison in every filament. Mr. Hill, too, as a continuing member of the company, and his alert, youthful herald was entirely in the picture.

Praises Mme. Lehmann.

But Mme. Lehmann was new here in the part of Elsa, and with the exception of Claire Dux she is the loveliest singer of the rôle I ever heard. Likewise Mr. Nissen's Telramund was strange to this stage, and he promptly registered a hit with the rest of the cast.

There was some difficulty in recognizing him when the curtain went up because he presented himself minus the drooping, long-horn mustache without which no baritone has ever been able to sing the part before, but there was no mistake once he began to sing. He and Mme. Lehmann are actors, too, as well as singers, a matter in which they, too, became one with the rest of the cast.

Opera Is Well Staged.

Among the other things that made it a pleasant afternoon, the opera was extraordinarily well staged. Never have I seen so many intelligent details so well worked out as took place in the first act. This act, by the way, is back to its former scenery of the big tree and the river, the castle having been retired. If it had not been that in the course of the proceedings the male chorus went modernistic and began to sing quarter-tones, the whole act could have taken a 100 per cent rating.

The second act had some slightly unorthodox dealings in matters of lighting, but it developed into an eye filling, colorful picture at the end. Wherefore, what with one thing and another, "Lohengrin" can be sincerely recommended as one of the things to visit during the present opera season.

IN LOVE TANGLE

COUNTESS DE TOLNA.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Nov. 8.—A $100,000 suit charging the alienation of his former wife's affections, which was brought recently in a Brooklyn court by Count Festetics de Tolna, will be contested by Baron Curt Szekessy, whom the Austrian nobleman accuses of wooing his wealthy American bride away from him. The baron himself made this announcement today between cocktails at a reception held in the countess' Paris palace.

"I am sailing on the Ile de France Wednesday and I am going to settle the count for good," the baron declared.

"A duel?" the baron was asked.

"Duel! No, I'll hit him on the nose if I get a chance."

Baron Szekessy was once the special aid to former Police Commissioner Enright and also a special agent for the French surete generale. He has represented New York in international crime conferences here since 1919, he said. Countess de Tolna, who is one of the leading social lights in the American colony here, declared the count's suit is unfounded. She alleged it is an effort to get more money out of her.

RUMANIAN MOBS BEAT UP JEWS IN STREETS OF CITY

'Tramp Him in the Dust!' Students Cry.

BY EGBERT SWENSON.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BUCHAREST, Oct. 21.—[By mail.]—The nationalistic, anti-Semitic students who parade up and down Bucharest's main streets and make Jew-baiting a daily spectacle of the capitol have a new war cry—"Long Live Hitler!" It supplements their unusual shout, "Down with the Jews!"

Curiously ignoring that phase of Hitler's nationalism which demands destruction of the peace treaties which created "greater Rumania," giving her her new borders, they think of him only as the world's chief anti-Semite.

And so they cheer the name of the German fascist as they pass down the street in small groups dressed in the national costume, narrow white homespun trousers, white linen shirts with tails hanging outside the trousers edged at the bottom with delicate lace, and short embroidered jackets that end at the waist. They depart from the national costume only in the matter of hat. Instead of the small round black peasant's hat, they wear broad brimmed black felts such as students and artists used to wear in the Paris Latin quarter.

Jews Avoid Crowds.

Under their arms they carry copies of their publication which in violent phrases sprinkled with invective call for the suppression of the Jew. "Tramp him in the dust like the bloodsucking leech he is!" is the tenor and tone of their appeal.

And the citizen with pronounced Semitic features passes quietly down a side street to avoid being forced to buy one of the sheets that revile his race.

I was drinking a turceasca—Turkish coffee—after dinner at a terrace table looking down on the city's busiest square when I saw such an incident for the first time. The square was thronged with people in gay mood. Bucharest was strolling en masse in its streets, as is its evening habit.

Suddenly there was a congestion among the strollers, a flocking to one point. From the middle of the commotion came angry voices. I hurried down to see, my Rumanian companion leisurely following me.

"It's only students baiting another Jew," he remarked.

How Jews Are "Persuaded."

Four young stalwarts in national costume, each with a sheaf of papers under his arm, surrounded a little man with crinkly, red hair, aquiline nose, fat jowls, an obviously semitic face. The stalwarts held out their papers to the little man. He talked in a hasty, frightened, but stubborn tone. He was objecting to buying a paper, my companion explained.

The vendors looked menacingly. The little man persisted. Then some one from the crowd reached past a student and pushed a swift fist into the little man's ribs. Frightened into submission, the little man hastily pulled out his purse, gave the nearest vender a coin, accepted a paper and slunk away with it, followed by jeers and sneering laughter from the crowd.

Cabinet Is Indifferent.

I have since then seen several similar incidents in the same square, which seems to be a favorite place for anti-semitic demonstrations.

Rumania has a new cabinet. At the end of an interview with the new premier, M. Mironescu, I asked him what he intended to do about anti-semitic violence. He bridled.

"If there now any anti-semitic violence?" he asked, rather testily. I told him what I had seen.

"O, that," he replied, relief in his voice. "That's not important. We'll suppress that."

Meantime, the Jews are still buying anti-semitic publications in the streets and squares of Bucharest.

FROM ZANIZEMAI, SEMIPALATINSK, SIBERIA.

(Picture in rotogravure section)

Fred R. Hess, who wrote the letter, is a resident of Berwyn, Ill., and Indian Lake, Dowagiac, Mich. He is now in Russia as chief engineer of construction for the Klebostrot (bread trust) at Zanizemai, where he is building a flour mill and grain elevators. For weeks before the arrival of his American force Mr. Hess was, so far as he knew, the only American within a radius of a thousand miles of Zanizemai. Following are excerpts of his vivid descriptions of the country:

"The terrible dust lies thick on my desk as I write—and my desk was clean when I started. This is the edge of the desert; there is not a tree in sight, and only scant vegetation, without a blossom. But every house, whether of sun-baked mud or logs, has flowering plants in the windows.

"Zanizemai is across the river from Semipalatinsk. This side is nearly all Kasak, Mongolian, and Mohammedan.

"These people have no conception of our living standards. Wearing apparel ranges from pajamas to furs. My nearest neighbors are Kasaks, in mud houses built half underground. The goats, cattle, and camels are housed under the family roof, and the entrances to the houses are invariably through the stables.

"The natives eat horse meat and camel meat and their favorite beverage is 'kumis,' or sour mare's milk, which is sold in large quantities from barrels on carts. It is extremely sour

"The flies are not the worst things here, and bedbugs are merely a circumstance. The fleas are the greatest pests. They lie in wait by the dozens. Bedbugs and flies can be controlled, but it takes genius for fleas.

Letter received by Mrs. Fred R. Hess, Dowagiac, Mich.

"The mechanics have no tools. I have to watch four carpenters trying to work with one hammer, and that so crude that it is beyond imagination. Carpenters are paid less than two rubles a day.

"This is September. Work started in May. From the American viewpoint we have accomplished about three weeks' work. The story of it is almost unbelievable.

"It is all strange—strange as a dream—but there is human kindness, and I have yet to find a trace of bad intention. The mistakes are from ignorance and the conduct without malice. These people will come out of the darkness, but what a task there is before them!"

RUSSIA DECREES BAN ON WORKERS LEAVING OLD JOBS

Drafts "Deserters" Into Forced Labor.

BY DONALD DAY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

RIGA, Latvia, Nov. 8.—An additional half pound of black bread was issued to the employed workers of Moscow and other soviet cities yesterday on the occasion of the 13th anniversary of the bolshevik revolution, which was celebrated throughout Russia with oratory, parades, and free theatrical performances.

The Russian anniversary also marked the fifth year of the dictatorship of Joseph Stalin, who showed his iron authority over the Communist party by granting Commissar Rykov, who for 12 years has been president of the people's commissars—a post corresponding to the prime minister of other countries—a month's "vacation."

Workers Must Work.

Also on the 13th anniversary decrees were published in the Isvestia, official government organ, providing that every employed worker in Russia must remain on the job for the next two years under the penalty of being drafted for forced labor detachments and sent to some distant province unaccompanied by his family.

The commissariat of labor was the originator of the decree which has placed the enrollment of labor in Russia upon a military basis. The unemployed will no longer be permitted to concentrate in urban centers and the steady influx of peasants from villages seeking jobs will be controlled. Hereafter persons seeking work must register in the employment offices of the towns and villages, which will enlist workers for industries and which will have to forward requisitions for manpower to a central organization in Moscow.

Engineers Are Included.

Workers refusing proffered jobs will be regarded as deserters and will be assigned to hard labor, says the decree. This includes engineers and technical personnel refusing to obey orders for transfer or an assignment.

The only exempted class is women with families, who cannot be transferred to other localities without their consent. Coal, metal and transport industries and large construction projects will be granted the first call for manpower. The recruits must pass a physical examination.

War Scare Minimized.

Last year's anniversary was held under the slogan of "Hands off Russia," the orators informing the workers that a new war was around the corner and urging the workers to concentrate on their jobs to strengthen the industries, thus enabling the bolsheviks to defend soviet soil.

This year the war scare was minimized. Instead, the commissars boasted that foreign countries were facing an economic crisis, with 22,000,000 unemployed, while the soviet government has wiped out the unemployment problem by the simple expedient of abolishing subsidies and ordering the jobless pressed into forced labor detachments.

Another decree rescinds the right of individual enterprises to employ labor.

2 BOOTLEGGERS TO SOCIETY FOLK APPEAR IN COURT

Two so-called society bootleggers figured in the federal courts yesterday. They are Vito San Fillis of Sunset lane and Elmridge drive, Glencoe, and Michael Crowe, 7609 Bosworth avenue, former owner of the Peep-O-Day road house and said to be a relative of Patrick Crowe, kidnaper of Jack Cudahy.

San Fillis was sentenced to four months in jail and fined $500 by Federal Judge Woodward on charges of selling liquor. His wife, said to be a former French countess, pleaded with Assistant United States Attorney Eugene A. Tappy to recommend probation, but the court denied it. San Fillis, who had Canadian wine and liquor lists and a card index of prominent names, also is awaiting trial on a counterfeiting charge.

Crowe was arraigned before United States Commissioner Walker and held in bond of $1,000 pending a hearing Nov. 17.

RUPTURE

Don't submit to avoidable operations or the use of outlawed trusses, as they all set where the hernia is and not where the opening is. The opening is seldom larger than a dime no matter the size of the rupture, and all cases can be retained with the end of a lead pencil. The Separate Shield Cannot in combination with the Retainer-Simplex (Patent No. 74247, No. 1237709 and other patents pending)—a scientific achievement in a highly specialized art—it will not only retain any case of rupture perfectly, but contracts the opening in 10 days on the average case. Infinitely superior to any instrument method or operations and producing results in no other way obtainable. All cases are secure a lifetime as against further trouble or expense. Large or difficult cases of incisional rupture (following operations) specially solicited. THREE MILLION SATISFIED OWNERS

GERMANS ROUSED BY TERRORISM OF EXILES IN POLAND

100,000 Lose Vote Right; Plan Appeal to League.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Nov. 8.—According to protests by German officials today, a new era of oppression of the German minorities in Poland, marked by flagrant violations of the rights guaranteed by the league of nations, has begun. The new terrorism to intimidate German voters is thought to be part of the campaign for the Polish parliamentary elections which are to take place on Nov. 16.

Germans in Upper Silesia have sent telegrams to the Polish minister of the interior appealing for protection against the local terrorists, but have not received any reply to their appeals.

Plan Appeal to League.

Upper Silesia is planning to appeal to the league of nations. A telegram protest received in Berlin says:

"Terrorism is worse than in the days of the Polish uprising, since the terrorists when holding up men of German stock attack them in the open streets and do not mind if they hit women and children."

In one town young Poles of German origin were seized by strong Polish groups and tarred and feathered, "in the true American Ku Klux Klan fashion," according to telegrams to the Vossische Zeitung.

Juggle Lists of Voters.

A wholesale disenfranchisement of Germans is being carried out through juggling of voting lists, German authorities claim. In Kattowitz 5,000 Upper Silesians of German blood have been stricken from the lists of voters without the slightest explanation, though all of them have been registered in previous elections. The Germans assert that a total of 100,000 citizens have thus been deprived of the rights guaranteed them by the league of nations.

The names of Germans have been struck from the lists of candidates in the Graudenz and Wloclawek districts on the grounds that their nominations were not supported, as required by law, by 50 electors. Actually their nominations had been signed by 100 who had voted in all previous elections. The names of 54 nominary voters were struck off the lists without explanation in order to invalidate the candidates.

Most of the men and women that have been barred from the elections have been struck off because they had insisted on the right to send their children to German schools conducted under Polish supervision, as promised by the league of nations in all international treaties.

Ukrainians Complain to League.

VIENNA, Austria, Nov. 8.—(AP)—United National Ukrainian associations today addressed a resolution to the league of nations and the international Red Cross, protesting against alleged acts of terrorism by Poland in eastern Galicia.

The resolution asserted that thousands of Ukrainians were dying lingering deaths or suffering from lashings inflicted by Polish troops. In some cases, the resolution said, blows up to 500 had been inflicted on peasants who had long fainted from pain.

Within the last few weeks, the resolution alleged, homes had been razed in 700 villages in the districts of Arnopol, Buczacz, Sokol, Podhajce, Horody, Stawyczi, and Gaje in eastern Galicia.

VISION SOUP LINE IN RUE DE LA PAIX FOR DRESS KINGS

Famed Paris Stylists Face Trade Drop.

BY EDMOND TAYLOR.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Nov. 8.—Hard times have hit the Paris fashion factories and a number of people are wondering if soup kitchens are going to have to be established in the Rue de la Paix.

In the last week several exclusive custom made dress shops have been forced to close their doors and the smaller ones which can be found in almost any block in the city are going out of business by the dozens. An investigation today revealed a staggering list of internationally known houses which have either failed or are struggling to keep their heads above water.

Some of the well known shops which have already closed their doors are Cyber, Deuillet-Doucet, Alice Bernard, Mag Helly, Bechoff, and Irfe.

Merge to Stave Off Bankruptcy.

The last place was run by Prince Felix Youssoupoff. Drecoll-Beer, one of the leading dressmaking houses in the Place Vendome, went broke a short time ago and only escaped bankruptcy by merging with the world famous house of Agnes, which is reported to be in a shaky condition itself.

With the exception of Bechoff and Drecoll-Beer, all of the firms which failed are second string houses which had only begun to attain prominence in the last few years, but a number of the older firms, which dictate fashions to women the world over, such as Poiret and Callot Soeurs, are known also to be in desperate straits.

It is feared that if the movement keeps up Paris will definitely lose her lofty position as the fashion capital of the world—probably to New York. In addition it is a serious blow to business in France, since the style creation industry is one of the most important in the country and provides employment for thousands.

Girl Workers Hit.

The bad times which have hit the dressmaking industry here have particularly affected thousands of little midinettes whose only source of income was from this business. They were forced to work for starvation wages even when conditions were the most favorable, and since many are completely alone in the world, further failures among the dressmaking establishments is bound to reduce them to terrible misery.

Then get busy! Want-Ad Wanda is offering a brand-new series of Hidden Want Ad games. Again she challenges you to follow her trail and find the want ads which she has hidden in the want ad columns of today's Tribune. Loads of fun for everybody—a real treasure hunt, mysterious messages, baffling clues, lots of excitement!

Just Follow These Simple Directions:

In the want ad columns of today's Tribune there have been inserted a number of mysterious want ads. These want ads look exactly like regular want ads, except the wording is different. All together there are between 10 and 15 of these Hidden Want Ads. You are invited to hunt for the Hidden Want Ads and try for the $100 in cash prizes which the Tribune will pay.

The game starts with the picture on this page. This picture represents one of the main classifications of Tribune Want Ads. Study the picture and decide which classification you think the artist had in mind. Then turn to that classification in today's want ad section and look through the want ads under that heading until you find the first Hidden Want Ad. You can't possibly miss it.

Each Hidden Want Ad Leads to the Next

After you have found this first Hidden Want Ad, read it over carefully. THE WORDING OF EACH HIDDEN WANT AD GIVES A HINT OR CLUE TO THE HIDING PLACE OF THE NEXT ONE. It's just like a treasure hunt. You don't have to search through the entire want ad section to find the Hidden Want Ads if you will just keep your wits about you. The Hidden Want Ads all tie up with each other. The picture helps you find the first one. The first one helps you find the second one. The second helps you find the third, and so on.

Remember, there are no less than 10 Hidden Want Ads and no more than 15. It's up to you to decide when you have found them all.

Awards will be made to the persons who send in the most nearly complete sets of Hidden Want Ads arranged in the most nearly correct order in accordance with these rules. Neatness and ingenuity of presenting them will count. In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded.

You may clip the Hidden Want Ads from the paper and paste them on the handy blank provided at the right, or you may copy them down on separate sheets of paper. You may indicate what you believe to be their proper order or sequence by numbering them 1, 2, 3, 4, etc.

This offer is open to all—men and women, boys and girls—except employes of the Chicago Tribune and their families. You pay nothing. Just prove your skill.

Entries should be mailed to "HIDDEN WANT ADS 'G'," the Chicago Tribune, Postoffice box 1718, Chicago, Ill. All entries for today's game must be received in the Tribune office not later than 6:00 P. M. on Thursday, November 13, 1930.

CITY WILL MARK ARMISTICE DAY NEXT TUESDAY

Red Cross and Legion to Be Leaders.

Twelve years ago next Tuesday Chicago forgot its work and ran riot. Whistles blew hysterically. A wild disorder of paper, ticker tape, confetti, and a bedlam of noise swept the loop and surged like wildfire into outlying suburbs. The armistice ending the world war had been signed.

This Tuesday, a dozen years after, only the insignia of the Red Cross and the American flag along Boul Mich and the loop streets, and a few scattered meetings of the American Legion and civic and other patriotic groups, will make public recognition of the anniversary of the war's end. Things more important than gratitude occupy America's thought even twelve years after the war is over—such things as unemployment and Volstead.

Game Brings in Funds.

The American Red Cross and the American Legion are still carrying on. It is brought to mind on Armistice day, for the fellows who got cracked up in one way or another over there. Yesterday a charity football game between St. John's Military academy of Delafield, Wis., and Culver Military academy, Culver Ind., at Soldiers' field brought a sizeable fund to the Cook County council of the American Legion. This will be used for the benefit of disabled and unemployed war veterans.

The American Red Cross will start on Armistice day its annual Red Cross roll call, with the "toughest job ahead that we have ever faced," quoting James T. Nicholson, manager of the Chicago chapter. In any year it is not easy to raise $225,000, representing that many members, but this year it will be doubly hard. More disabled veterans need help than ever before, and the need in every field of the Red Cross has been greatly increased, he added.

The first city-wide Armistice day exercises will be held on Tuesday from 10 until 11 a. m. at La Salle street, between Washington and Randolph streets, under the auspices of the Cook county council of the American Legion. Col. Hanford MacNider, United States ambassador to Canada, will speak. War time musical tunes will be played by the uniformed bands and drum corps of several American Legion posts.

World Peace to Be Topic.

Another celebration will be held at the Chicago temple, Clark and Washington streets, between 12 and 1 o'clock, at a city-wide mass meeting in the interest of world peace. This will be sponsored by the Conference of Jewish Women, Chicago Church federation, Chicago Urban league, Chicago Woman's Aid, Council of Jewish Women, Forum of League for Women Voters, Young Women's Christian association, Woman's City club, and other groups. State Representative Morton D. Hull will give the principal address, and David D. Shilling law and Rabbi Solomon B. Freehof will also speak.

Paul V. McNutt, past national commander of the American Legion and dean of the law school of the University of Indiana, will address 28,000 telephone makers at an Armistice day at the Hawthorne works of the Western Electric company. American Legion groups will be present.

An all day conference of the Catholic Association for International Peace will be held at the Congress hotel in observance of Armistice day. The Rev. Frederic Siedenburg, S. J., dean of the downtown college of Loyola university; Dr. Charles G. Fenwick of Bryn Mawr college; Dr. John A. Lapp of Marquette university; Chief Justice John P. McGoorty, and Dr. Jerome G. Kerwin of the University of Chicago will speak.

Senator Elect James Hamilton Lewis will speak at the Armistice day celebration of the Milwaukee Avenue Chamber of Commerce at Milwaukee avenue and Paulina street. There will be a parade of school children, bands, and floats, and patriotic groups.

"Y" Workers Hold Reunion.

The "Y" Overseas union, men and women who served with the Y. M. C. A. organization on the battle fronts, attended their annual Armistice day dinner last night at the Medical and Dental Arts club, Lake street and Wabash avenue. The principal address was given by Darius A. Davis, administrative secretary for Europe of the national councils of the Y. M. C. A. of North America.

The anual Armistice ball sponsored by the British and colonial veterans and all British societies was held last night at the Hotel Sherman. Today at St. James' cathedral the British societies will attend an Armistice memorial service. There will be a parade of veterans headed by the British band and the Chicago Highlanders' pipe band leaving 360 North Michigan at 10:15 a. m. Afterward they will be reviewed by Godfrey Haggard, British consul general.

JAILED AS GUN TOTER.

Ray Malese, 24 years old, 11146 Vincennes avenue, yesterday was fined $100 and costs and sentenced to a year in the Bridewell by Judge William Belander on a charge of carrying concealed weapons.

MAYOR ORDERS CITY AID TO KEEP 'HIS MOUTH SHUT'

Victor S. Petterson, deputy city controller and veteran city civil service employé, was told in a telegram from Mayor Thompson yesterday to keep his mouth shut or take a seat on the mayor's "boosters' wagon."

Petterson is the official who was given credit among Democratic and Independent Republican aldermen for spiking the mayor's thousand word statement issued to the press on Thursday. In the statement the mayor called upon his department heads to "work night and day" and "Sundays if necessary" to spend the millions of bond money approved at Tuesday's election. The mayor said his department heads would thus aid employment. Petterson pointed out that under the law of bonds cannot begin to draw interest before Jan. 1, 1931, and that it will take at least 60 days to print the bonds and advertise them for sale.

"If this is the best you can do I would advise you to keep your mouth shut," the telegram read in part. ". . ." it would be better for you to take a seat in the boosters' wagon." Thompson also indicated that improvement work will be started before the bonds are sold. One way to get the money before Jan. 1, members of the council said, would be to sell the bonds at a large discount.

3 Events in Day

The ranks of the debutantes were augumented yesterday by three girls who were introduced to society at debut teas and receptions in the afternoon. Miss Helen Stanley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Edwin Stanley of 20 East Cedar street, made her bow at the Casino, wearing a banana yellow satin frock and a corsage of yellow roses. Her mother wore moss green chiffon. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley are to give a ball for their daughter on Dec. 30 at the Casino.

Miss Winifred Wheeler, who was presented by her mother, Mrs. Robert C. Wheeler, at a tea at their residence at 1447 Astor street, wore a coral chiffon gown with coral beading and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The bud and her mother, who wore a silver gray velvet gown, were assisted in the receiving line by her two grandmothers, Mrs. Mahold D. Thatcher of Pueblo, Colo., and Mrs. Eugene Wheeler of 8 Scott street.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Stanley Churchill introduced their daughter, Miss Mary Esther Churchill, at a tea and reception at the Woman's Athletic club, and later gave a dinner-dance at the Drake for the bud and her assistants and escorts. Miss Churchill wore a pink taffeta period gown and held a colonial bouquet.

GERMANY'S PLEA TO LIMIT DRAFT ARMIES BEATEN

Only Five Nations Back Berlin's Proposal.

BY HENRY WALES.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

GENEVA, Nov. 8. — Count von Bernstorff's proposal aimed to limit the number of army conscripts called to the colors each year was rejected by the league of nations preparatory disarmament commission here today. The vote was 12 to 6.

Fourteen delegates abstained from voting, including those of the United States and Great Britain. Russia, China, Norway, Sweden and Holland backed Count von Bernstorff's proposal. Natons voting against it were Italy, France, Japan, Poland, Jugo-Slavia, Czecho-Slovakia, Belgium, Rumania, and other nations, which adhere to the conscript system.

The need for limiting the period of conscript service was generally agreed upon, but differences arose over the methods by which this could be achieved.

Argues for 1 Year Service.

One year of military training should be the maximum period of service for soldiers in conscript armies Lord Robert Cecil said in the debate preceding the vote. The British delegate stated that an important section of military opinion, including Germany, foresees the time when armies of the future will be small but highly trained, and well equipped with mechanical arms and motorised transport.

The continental powers maintaining conscript armies are divided on the question of whether to have a short period of training, thereby providing a huge active reserve, or longer periods of military training, thus automatically reducing the size of the reserve.

"We aim for a system like that of Switzerland, where all the males' duty under military service calls for defense and not aggression," Lord Cecil said. "That is vital, and unless we arrive at limiting war material as well as effective means, I do not think we shall have done anything towards disarmament."

France Defends System.

Rene Massigli of France in defending the conscript system, declared that limiting the size of the annual contingent would create inequality.

"Canada opposes compulsory service and its abolition would mark an important era in moral and material disarmament," argued Dr. Riddell of Canada. "The German amendment limits the annual contingent and the total period of service, and Canada supports it wholeheartedly."

Count von Bernstorff, defending the amendment, said:

"The system of conscription in Europe has developed until children have been brought up as soldiers from the cradle. The exclusion of trained reserves as a result of the convention would not be worth the ink it would be signed with."

Gen. T. Kaspryzycki of Poland offered an amendment to fix the standard period of service in all countries.

Maxim Litvinov, Russian delegate, renewed his attack on world powers, gibing them for not doing their utmost to scrap military forces.

FEEL MEAN?

DON'T be helpless when you suddenly get a headache. Reach in your pocket for immediate relief. If you haven't any Bayer Aspirin with you, get some at the first drugstore you come to. Take a tablet or two and be rid of the pain. Take promptly. Nothing is gained by waiting to see if the pain will leave of its own accord. It may grow worse! Meantime, you are suffering needlessly.

There are many times when Bayer Aspirin will "save the day." It will always ease a throbbing head. Quiet a grumbling tooth. Relieve the nagging pain of neuralgia or neuritis. Check a cold. Even rheumatism has lost its terrors for those who have learned to depend on these tablets.

Keep Bayer Aspirin handy. At home, and in the office. Carry the pocket tin as insurance against colds. Gargle with Bayer Aspirin at the first suspicion of sore throat, and reduce the infection. Look for Bayer on the box—and the word Genuine in red. Genuine Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart.

Nice things about your teeth in 1932?

Ipana and Massage of the Gums Mean Sparkling Teeth Two Years from Now!

MEN ALWAYS ADMIRE GOOD-LOOKING TEETH

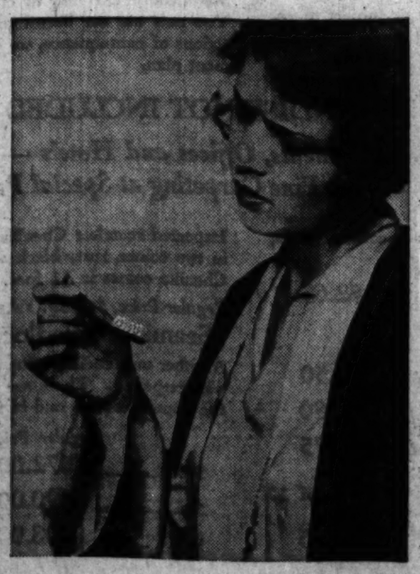
Men's eyes—of course they light up today at sight of your white, sparkling teeth! But two years from now—will your teeth still be as lovely? Think of the foods you eat. SOFT foods. Your gums get almost no exercise, almost no stimulation. Day by day they grow more and more listless, more and more tender. Slowly the tissues break down from neglect. In time they will be so weak that your gums may bleed!



"PINK TOOTH BRUSH"—AGAIN!

In time you notice "pink tooth brush" . . . notice it again and again. And that's rather serious. Gums that bleed are susceptible to gingivitis, Vincent's disease, even pyorrhea. But, far more serious even than this: your teeth may grow more and more dull until that fine sparkle men so admire is gone for good! They mean, too, that some of your whitest teeth may not be nearly so sound as they look.

BUT TWO YEARS FROM NOW, YOUR TEETH WILL STILL SPARKLE—IF . . .

Now—today—before bleeding gums threaten you, get a tube of Ipana Tooth Paste. Your teeth will gain new whiteness, new brilliancy. And more than that, by gently massaging your gums with Ipana on the brush each time you clean your teeth, you can prevent "pink tooth brush" and save the health of both gums and teeth. For Ipana contains ziratol, a preparation well known and long used by the profession for its efficiency in toning and invigorating tender gum tissue.

MICHIGAN COMES FROM BEHIND TO DEFEAT HARVARD, 6 TO 3

WHEN FIGHTING CHICAGO ELEVEN WAS GIVING PURDUE A BATTLE

Alex Yunevich, Purdue full back, cuts off right tackle in the first quarter of the Boilermakers' battle with the University of Chicago at Stagg field. His teammates are blocking well, but no one was able to take out Walter Knudson, Maroon full back, No. 2, who is about to tackle Yunevich. Purdue won, 26 to 7, the while learning that the Midway eleven was full of fight. Chicago was more than a match for last year's Big Ten champions, in the first half keeping Purdue on the defensive and scoring its first conference touchdown of the season in the second period, an achievement that enabled Chicago to lead 7 to 6 at half time. The touchdown was made possible when Buzzell intercepted a pass in midfield and ran to Purdue's one yard line, from where Knudson plunged over the goal line. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

WILDCATS ROUT JINX, 25 TO 0; PASSES FIGURE IN THREE SCORES

Backs Show They Can Plunge in 65 Yard March.

BY WILFRID SMITH.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 8.—Northwestern knocked out the Indiana jinx this afternoon in the first quarter. Then the Wildcats continued, although at a more moderate pace, eventually winning their fourth Western conference victory, 25 to 0.

Thrice defeated in as many years by the Hoosiers, Northwestern fought with a power not to be denied. True, the first touchdown was made possible by a 27 yard pass, and the third and fourth tallies were traceable directly to accurate aerials. But there was no gainsaying the power of Northwestern's line and the superiority of its hard running backs. The second touchdown was a perfect exhibition of the Wildcats' abilities. From their own 35 yard line the ball was advanced in 16 plays and five first downs, with Reb Russell plunging the final inches to the double chalk line.

12,000 Fans See Game.

Thus Northwestern won and now faces Wisconsin, its fifth and last Big Ten opponent, and if victorious Saturday will have earned at least a share of the 1930 conference football honors.

Twelve thousand, for the main loyal adherents of the Cream and Crimson of old I. U., attended the homecoming games. They cheered as Indiana fought determinedly to stem an attack which physically they were unable to meet.

Again and again they charged, never retreating but yielding hard fought ground to a superior foe. Indiana consistently used an eight man defensive line, yet was unable to meet the Wildcats' rushes.

Sixteen first downs, 12 in the first half, measured the Wildcats' strength. Indiana made 10 first downs.

Leach Starts Touchdown Parade.

There was no hesitancy as the Wildcats opened their first quarter drive to down the Indiana jinx which until today has defeated every Northwestern team Dick Hanley has coached. Twice they kicked, then took the ball on their own 29 yard line. Lefty Leach started the touchdown procession with a gain of 15 yards. Reb Russell and Hank Bruder followed with short, powerful thrusts, first inside the tackles and then over center, until finally the attack bogged on Indiana's 41 yard stripe. On third down, Bruder passed wide to Russell near the left side of the field, and the fleet left back received the pass to race across the gridiron to Indiana's four yard line.

Russell and Leach smashed into the defending crimson jersied men without success, but on the last play Russell scored. Bruder place kicked the seventh point.

Russell Scores Again.

Northwestern received the following kickoff and Russell was downed on his 35 yard line. Bruder, Leach, Russell, and Moore banged away, never gaining less than three yards, and in 16 plays Northwestern had thrust back its opponents a second time.

Again it was Russell who terminated the march. Bruder's place kick fell away to the left of the wooden uprights, but the Wildcats led, 13 to 0.

For a third time Northwestern, with Russell receiving, carried the kickoff back to the Wildcats' 43 yard line. Bruder shot through an opening outside of tackle for five yards as the quarter ended.

Oliphant Nabs Pass.

Resuming hostilities, the Wildcats marched to the Hoosiers' 26 yard line. Here Bruder's lateral pass to Moore gained 19 yards. Indiana's defense held for two plays, but Larry Oliphant raced into the end zone on third down to leap high in the air above the clutching defenders for Bruder's pass and another touchdown. Northwestern led, 19 to 0. Bruder's placement was blocked.

The score remained the same at the intermission, although Capt. Bruder intercepted a Hoosier pass in the closing seconds of the half to run 78 yards down the side line before he was stopped 22 yards from the goal.

Indiana, rallied between halves, held the complacent Wildcats scoreless in the third quarter. Zeller recovered Leo Hanley's fumble of Hughes' punt on Northwestern's 34 yard line, but the aroused Purple stopped the attack when Bob Clark intercepted Ross' pass

Purdue Brawn Beats Maroon Pluck, 26 to 7

BY HARVEY WOODRUFF.

Purdue's football representatives, vernacularly known as Boilermakers, displayed brutal disregard for football of the cultural variety as exemplified by Chicago's Maroons at Stagg field yesterday. They riveted four touchdowns to their season's record, while the Maroons were recording one touchdown, made possible by an intercepted pass. Approximately 20,000 persons saw the rout of so-called brain by actual brawn to a score of 26 to 7.

In bringing forth its primitive strength, Purdue was a bit tardy. Confused perhaps by just what to do against scholarly young men from the Midway cloisters, the Boilermakers blundered in attempting the amenities. This tardiness and confusion gave Maroon supporters their first real opportunity for excitement during the season to date.

Maroons Lead at Half.

Outclassed in weight, experience, and reserves, in everything except gameness, the first half ended with Chicago actually leading, 7 to 6. It would have been leading 7 to 0, except that a Maroon lineman was offside on a Purdue pass play as the gun barked. That made another attempt possible and Purdue had its first touchdown of thirty minutes' play on an easy pass into the scoring zone.

It is detracting nothing from the fighting qualities of the Maroons and their determination against an eleven which only a missed goal after touchdown keeps them from an unbeaten record to say that Purdue was not clicking as its admirers thought it ought to click during the first half. True, Buzzell's brilliant run of 59 yards was against a second string line. Perhaps it was through second string backs, but with eight backs of the caliber shown by the Boilermakers this season how does a mere newspaper writer know which are the second string backs?

Purdue First Team Enters.

Immediately after Wally Knudson had plunged over the line for the needed yard, however, eleven other young men in gold colored suits trotted forth to supplant the eleven young men who had been scored against. They began to tear the lighter Maroon forward wall to ribbons, but two fumbles, several penalties, and desperate Maroon tackling kept these regulars from scoring until the last fifteen seconds of the half. None could doubt Purdue was stronger and eventually must triumph, but the delay in consummation made it a more interesting contest, and showed Chicago partisans how much their team had improved.

Purdue's linemen, however, were able to open holes for the backs through the center of Chicago's line and off tackles often enough to demonstrate supeiriority. There was really no comparison of the lines, yet Chicago forwards smeared enough plays to keep the affair from becoming a complete rout. Boilermaker backs, taken as a whole, looked the most powerful in the Big Ten. That may

WOLVERINE PASS IN THE FINAL QUARTER BEATS DROP KICK

Newman Hurls Ball to Hudson Past Safety Man.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Michigan's invasion of the Harvard stadium today was a success for the Wolverines, who turned back the Crimson before 52,000 fans by a score of 6 to 3. Fighting a sturdy, unyielding battle against a courageous eleven which thrice threatened their own territory, Maine and Blue spurted to victory after all signs pointed toward an unlooked for triumph for the home team.

A three point lead that Barry Wood gave Harvard on a drop kick at the start of the final quarter was with dramatic suddenness erased when Harry Newman, Michigan's forward passing ace, hurled a 27 yard pass to Roy Hudson, who raced 18 yards through unprotected Crimson territory to score. The Michigan coup, catching the Crimson unaware, proved an insurmountable obstacle for the Crimson eleven, which fought stubbornly but futilely to annex victory.

First Half Evenly Fought.

Harvard presented the sternest of opposition to the undefeated westerners and after a first half which was fairly even, came back to battle the visitors with a force which seemed strong enough to effect a defeat for the Wolverines. Twice in the third period did Harvard force its way to Michigan's 11 yard line, only to have attempts for field goals by Barry Wood miss on both occasions.

When the Crimson eleven gained an advantageous position for the third time in the game, just as the final quarter started, Wood capitalized the opportunity to boot over a drop kick from Michigan's 25 yard line and gave Harvard the satisfaction of marking up the first score of the afternoon.

True, the kick was worth only three points; but, coming at the time it did, after both teams had fought one another unyieldingly for three full periods, these three points looked sufficiently adequate to seal the victory.

Newman's hurling was the medium

Army Eleven 13 to 0 Victor Over Illinois

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Nov. 8.—The Army marched through the Illinois line in their return game at the Yankee stadium this afternoon and won, 13 to 0, on two touchdowns and one conversion, all scored in the second half.

Ray Stecker, a yearling or sophomore from Hazelton, Pa., the boy who butted Kilday in the trousers at Yale's goal for the controversial touchdown at New Haven, made both touchdowns for the West Point cadets, one on an end run, the other for a 40 yard sprint after intercepting a forward pass, in the last few minutes of play.

The first half was a fairly even contest, but the Illinois forward line was firmly broken in sections and the sections were pushed wide apart as the West Point team rolled to the goal in the third period to loosen the tension with the first scoring play. Illinois had one chance to score, an attempt at a field goal in the first quarter, but Berry's kick, shot from the 35 yard line, fell short.

Army Uses "Invalids."

The Army used a long list of personnel, including some cadets of no previous experience in a big game and also exhibited Cy Letzelter, the old Carnegie Tech star, who, no longer ago than Wednesday afternoon, was described as weak from fever and dangerous throat infection. He proved a highly interesting convalescent, and, while he didn't play the whole game, he was out on the yard, tumbling and diving in the rough merry making of a desperate game long enough to demonstrate remarkable powers of recuperation.

Stecker comes from the same public high school in Hazleton that sent Harry Wilson to West Point for perhaps the brightest football career ever enjoyed by any inmate of the old stone barracks. Thus far the new boy is well along toward a repetition of the other young man's achievements.

Class Begins to Tell.

The second half of the game was a fairly accurate justification of the probabilities as measured beforehand by the previous records of the teams. The Army had subtlety and trained skill behind the line and solid power up forward, and their hesitancy throughout the first half became a puzzle when they finally set out to score in the third period following the showy maneuvers of the Illinois band. When the drive did begin, the West Pointers not only pressed their way from their own 48 yard line but also recouped a 15 yard penalty for holding.

The big push began with Kilday darting through a wide gap in the left side of the Illinois line, opened by his own efficient forwards, as one of his associate backs fell to the rear, diverting attention with a fake passing gesture. The buck was slightly delayed, and when Kilday went through the gate the Illinois line seemed startled beyond ready recovery. Stecker followed Kilday's plunge with another

BRILL GOES HOME TO SCORE 3 TOUCHDOWNS AGAINST PENN

Savoldi, Schwartz, Carideo Help in Quaker Rout.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—The most devastating running attack that has struck a Pennsylvania football team since Eddie Kaw and George Pfann of Cornell ran wild here in 1921 was turned loose today as Notre Dame crushed the Red and Blue, 60 to 20, on Franklin field.

With 80,000 spectators, including Mayor James J. Walker of New York and many other notables, looking on in amazement, Notre Dame's magnificent collection of backs went on a rampage that turned the game into a rout and left the crowd dazed by the matchless perfection of its plays in every detail.

Notre Dame Shows Power.

Before the fury of this high geared Notre Dame attack a stalwart Penn eleven that had decisively beaten a powerful Kansas team a week ago was swept off its feet like chaff before a hurricane, and had not the Irish employed a horde of substitutes the score might have been far more one sided than it was. One came away from the game with a feeling of awe for the tremendous power inherent in this latest Notre Dame masterpiece, and it seemed hardly conceivable that any team in the country could bring its winning streak, now extended to fifteen games, to an end.

To make her crushing defeat all the more galling, it was a former Penn half back who started the avalanche of Notre Dame touchdowns and who played one of the most conspicuous rôles in the victory. Martin Brill, the Philadelphia boy who was unable to win a regular berth on the Red and Blue as a sophomore a few years ago, came back to Franklin field to hear the cheers of his friends pay tribute to his electrifying runs for touchdowns and to give him an ovation when he left the game in the second half.

Brill Scores Thrice.

Three times out of the ten occasions on which he carried the ball Brill broke loose to run for a touchdown. In the first period he raced 67 yards for the first score of the game and in the third quarter he went over twice more, once on a run of 32 yards and again on a 25 yard sprint.

In addition to these 18 points, Brill also paved the way for another touchdown by intercepting a pass. His defensive work and blocking also were of a high order and, all in all, it was a great day for the home town boy who came back to "make good."

However, Brill was not the only superlative back on the Notre Dame team today. If no one else gave thought to the splendid work of the South Bend forwards, the men who carried the ball through the huge gaps

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—An Ohio State eleven, with Fesler and Hinchman gaining much ground and a more coherent defense and a brilliant passing game, outplayed a game Naval academy team here this afternoon, and won, 27 to 0.

The Buckeyes scored a touchdown in each quarter, and in three instances extra points were added with placement kicks.

While the running game of the Buckeyes was responsible for the greatest total of yards, passes either scored the touchdowns or put the Ohioans in a position to score.

Wesley Fesler, playing end on defense and behind the line on the attack, gave a great exhibition of brilliant versatility, running off tackles like a flash, passing like a shot, doing the punting for the team, and at the same time guarding his end to perfection.

Navy Threatens Three Times.

Fesler had a worthy running mate in Hinchman, who scored two touchdowns and added a point with a placement goal.

The Navy showed flashes of fine attack and threatened the Ohio goal line in the second and third quarters, but lacked the consistency to carry the ball over. Kirn and Tschirgi led the running attack, but the latter retired early in the second quarter with a bad ankle.

In the final quarter, with Gannon passing and Hurley, Elliott, and others receiving, the Navy swept down more than half the length of the field, and the ball was in the Middies' possession when final time was called.

The Navy received the kick off and after Tschirgi and Kirn had carried the ball four yards apiece, Bauer was thrown for a loss and Bowstrom punted to Hinchman on Ohio's 40 yard line. After a first down made by Fesler and Holcomb, Fesler passed to Hinchman on Navy's 23 yard line, and on the next play the latter ran the distance around Navy's left end for a touchdown. Haubrick missed a try for goal by placement.

Navy Fumble Costly.

As the second quarter opened, an exchange of punts between Bowstrom and Fesler landed the ball on Navy's 24 yard line and Hagberg's quick covered kick put it on Ohio's 21 yard point. Kirn ran Fesler's punt to the 39 yard line, but the Navy fumbled on the next play and Larkins recovered the ball. Fesler passed to Brady for six yards and then to Larkins for a touchdown. Ehrensberger kicked a placement goal for another point.

Ohio's touchdown in the third quarter was made from near midfield and was due to Hinchman's speed. Hagberg passed to Gannon and the latter reached for it, tipping the ball in the air. Hinchman grabbed the leather and sprinted 40 yards for the score. Holcomb kicked a placement goal for another point.

Ohio scored its final touchdown after ten minutes of the fourth quarter had passed. Brady caught Byng's pass and ran to Ohio's 38 yard line. Fesler skirted Navy's left end for eight yards and Brady, in two tries, took the ball to Navy's 16 yard point. After one pass had grounded Fesler passed to Horn for a touchdown. Ehrensberger missed a placement goal, but it was allowed, as a Navy player was offside.

MINNESOTA WINS, 59-0

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Minnesota used every player on its squad this afternoon as it romped through South Dakota university, 59 to 0.

The Gophers depended almost entirely on straight running plays to do most of their scoring. They completed five out of sixteen passes.

Minnesota was held scoreless in the third period.

The Gophers scored 19 points in the first period, 13 in the second, and 27 in the final, when Clinton Riebeth and Al Arnesault showed brilliance for the first time this season.

Manders, Riebeth, and Leksell each scored two touchdowns for the home boys, while Brockmeyer, W. Hass, and Arnesault came through with one apiece.

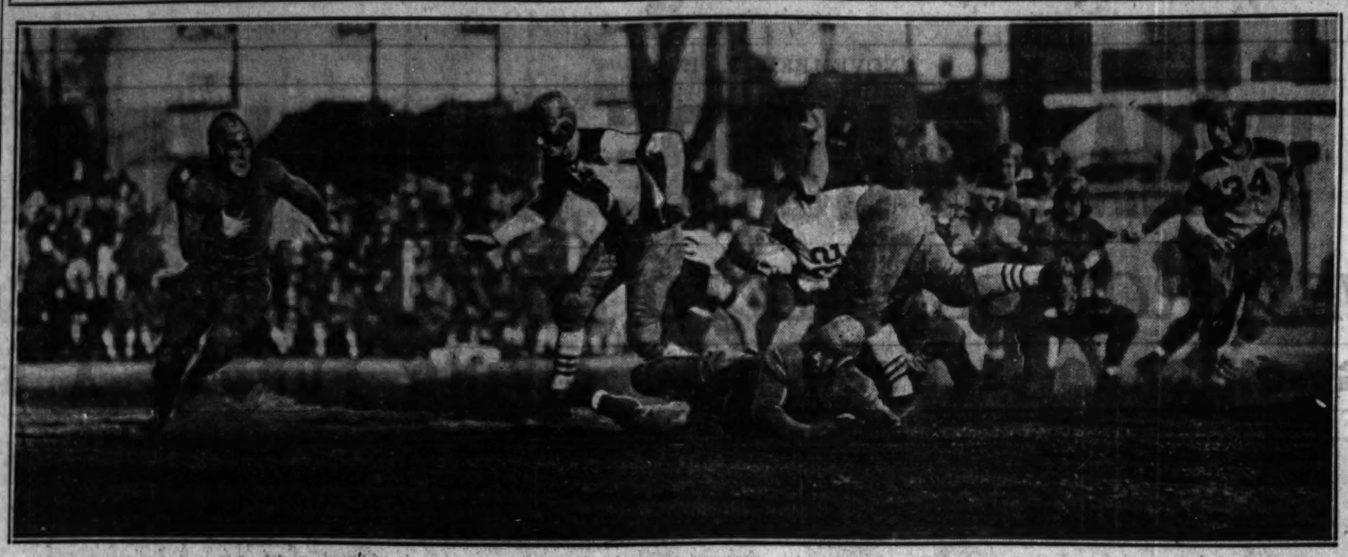
Minnesota made 24 first downs to four for the Dakotans. It took the Gophers only three plays before Brockmeyer crossed the south Dakota line for the first score. From then on it was a procession of scores as well as substitutes.

Minnesota displayed a new star today when Johnny Hass, track flash, got into the game and tore off several long gains. His brother, Walter, also was much more effective at carrying the ball than he has been at any other time this season.

WILLIAMS BEATS WESLEYAN.

Williamstown, Mass., Nov. 8.—[U. P.]—A powerful Williams eleven, with a large reserve of fine backs, trampled over Wesleyan, 46 to 0, here today.

A BLUE DEMON WHO SPREADS TERROR ON GRIDIRON



Matt Steffen, who, together with Ernie Butcher, was the offensive star of De Paul university's 14 to 0 triumph over Louisville yesterday at De Paul field, hits the southerners' line in the third period. A pass, Steffen to Butcher, scored the first touchdown in the second quarter. In the third session Steffen took the ball over in two plays from the Louisville 20 yard line.

BY FRENCH LANE.

De Paul university's homecoming was a great success yesterday for 5,000 rooters who staged a wild celebration early last night after the Blue Demons had turned back the University of Louisville team, 14 to 0. It was the north side eleven's fourth straight victory.

With Matt Steffen and the crippled Ernie Butcher leading the attack De Paul staged two big drives for touchdowns. The first was in the second quarter. The other came in the third quarter.

In the meantime the boys from Old Kentucky, while powerful on the defense most of the time, did not demonstrate a scoring punch. The Southerners made only two first downs and both were the result of passes in the second half after the ball had been in their own territory for a greater part of the game.

Pass Brings First Score.

The De Paul team, varying its attack, registered 13 first downs. The first touchdown was a result of a forward pass, and the second came following a series of plunges through the Louisville guards and tackles, mixed up with a few end runs in which the fleet footed Steffen carried the ball.

The hard running Butcher entered the game late in the first quarter after the two teams had played on even terms. Butcher's slashes off tackle and his sweeping end runs soon carried the ball into Louisville territory.

He continued to fight his way through the Louisville defense in the second period. With De Paul in possession of the ball on the Louisville 35 yard, Steffen tossed a 15 yard pass which settled into Butcher's arms. The tall Texan shook off two tacklers and raced 20 yards for a touchdown. Steffen kicked the goal from placement.

Butcher retired from the game soon after he made his run and was on the side lines for the rest of the afternoon.

Steffen Carries Ball Over.

Late in the third quarter De Paul drove down to the Louisville 20 yard line. Then Steffen got away for 15 yards. It was a hard run with two and three Louisville tacklers clinging to him all the way. On the next play Steffen took the ball again. He smashed through the right side of the Lousville forward wall and rolled over the line for the second De Paul touchdown.

Cherne and Stotts were too much for their opponents in the Louisville line, Rehrman, McMinnon, and Crowe were the headliners for the southern team.

Charleston Teachers Beat St. Viator College, 13-0

Bourbannais, Ill., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Charleston State Teachers' college kept undefeated in its race for the Little Nineteen football championship here last night, when it defeated St. Viator college, 13 to 0. The teachers scored in the second and final quarters, St. Viator carried the ball to the 6 yard line, but was unable to penetrate the Charleston wall for a score.

Kentucky's Wildcats Tamed by Duke, 14 to 7

Durham, N. C., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Kentucky's Wildcats were tamed here this afternoon by Duke's Blue Devils, who hung up their sixth consecutive victory, 14 to 7. It was Kentucky's second defeat in a row at the hands of a conference opponent.

In the WAKE of the NEWS

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER.

THE TRIBUNE this season is adopting a slightly altered plan for the award of a sterling silver football, actual size, to the Big Ten player of greatest value to his team in 1930. In advance, the experiment has several patent advantages and perhaps a minor disadvantage.

Primarily, the award is extended no more honors are distributed, but the chief prize remains the same, the silver football. The winner of the capital prize will be picked from the ten boys adjudged by their fellow players to have been the most valuable to their teams.

This vote of the players themselves is new. It allows the men, rather than outsiders, to express by ballot their estimate of the man most responsible for their success and most unselfish in his team efforts. Certainly no one should be better informed on this subject than the boys on the team.

Another factor is that there will be one man only on each team from whom the board of award will make its selection as most valuable in the Big Ten. In the past there sometimes have been two outstanding players on the same eleven, which divided the ballots and thus gave that college a smaller chance for the premier honor of middle western football.

The only potential objection we can see would be fraternity or class politics on the teams in the choice, which sometimes has governed choice of captains. THE TRIBUNE casts that aside on the theory the boys will enter into the spirit of a sportsmanlike proposition like sportsmen.

The minor disadvantage is that the board of award, consisting of the Big Ten coaches, officials, Commissioner Griffith, and the writer, will be restricted to the ten players chosen by the players and will not have an "open choice." Compared with the other advantages, this seems inconsequential.

Choices by the players will be made soon, after which the board of award will make its final choice. Already discussion and argument are under way concerning those "valuable" qualities of various players.

When the sun is always shining
And the sky's without a cloud;

And the mind's without a shroud—
'Tis easy then to tilt the heart
And flood the spotless skies

And the squalls arise and buffet
And our seamanship seems weak—
'Tis then a test of sportsmanship,
'Tis then the heart's on trial,
And the sportsmanship that's in us
Will be grateful with a smile.

Let's be thankful for the hurdles

We are grateful for the fight.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The University of Southern California rode rough shod over the University of California today, chalking up a 74 to 0 football victory. Only in the first period was the game a contest.

The Southerners, starting slowly and scoring only eight points in the opening quarter, gained momentum as they went along and the score was 28 to 0 at half time. The third period was a field day, the Trojans running up a count of 33. They added a final 13 points in the last quarter.

The score broke all records for the 15 year old rivalry between the two universities.

WASHINGTON STATE WINS.

Moscow, Idaho, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Washington State college today defeated the University of Idaho football team, 33 to 7, and tonight only the University of Washington stands between the Aggies and the championship of the Pacific Coast conference.

Idaho flashed an aerial attack, devised to offset the weight advantage of Washington State, but the Vandals scored only once by air.

Palo Alto, Cal., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Plunging and passing in a manner entirely foreign to earlier games, Stanford's Cardinals won their first major Coast conference game of the season today, overpowering Washington, 25 to 7.

"Divorce?" Asks Savoldi; "Why, I Haven't Married!"

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Joe Savoldi, Notre Dame full back, denied to reporters in the Franklin field dressing room after today's football game with the University of Pennsylvania that he is married and instituted a divorce suit before he left South Bend.

"The whole thing is news to me," he said. "I never have been married and am not seeking a divorce."

A South Bend dispatch today reported that attaches of the county clerk's office there said that attorneys for Savoldi carried a divorce suit to the clerk's office, but left without filing it.

Tells of Wedding.

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 8.—(AP)—City Judge A. W. Hosinski tonight said he officiated April 3, 1929, at the marriage of Miss Audrey Koehler of South Bend to Joe Savoldi, Notre Dame football star. Hosinski, then a justice of the peace, married them in his home, he said.

Hosinski, acting as attorney for Savoldi, yesterday filed suit for divorce and today withdrew it. He refused to comment tonight as to the reason for the withdrawal.

Miss Koehler, reached by telephone, corroborated Hosinski's statement. She said they obtained their license at Crown Point, Ind. She said she continued to reside with her father and Savoldi returned to Notre Dame after the marriage.

"Just a Joke," Says Dad.

Three Oaks, Mich., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Joseph Savoldi Sr. told the Associated Press at his home here tonight that he doesn't believe his son, the Notre Dame football star, is married.

"Joe isn't married," he said. "It's just a joke."

NOTRE DAME IS 60 TO 20 VICTOR OVER PENN TEAM

Brill Goes Home to Score 3 Touchdowns.

extra points also made him a conspicuous figure.

Caridco, Schwartz, Savoldi, O'Connor, Mullins, and Koken scored the other touchdowns for Notre Dame, each of them going over once.

It was the appearance of the powerful Savoldi on the field that galvanized the Rockne team into action. Until he came into the game to relieve Mullins at full back in the second quarter the Notre Dame attack was not getting anywhere. The Penn line was giving a splendid account of itself, to bring cheers from the stands as it stopped the Irish backs in their tracks time after time.

Savoldi Rallies Team.

But with the entry of Savoldi the complexion of the game changed almost instantly and a minute later the rout began as Brill went through right guard on a spinner, side stepped his way into the open, stiff armed the Penn safety, and raced 67 yards for the goal line.

Gentle's short kick gave Notre Dame the ball on Penn's 25 yard line at the start of the second period and in three plays Savoldi was over, making 16 yards on one rush. A minute later Brill intercepted a pass on his own 38 yard line and O'Connor, coming into the game, went around right end on his first play for 59 yards and another score.

Subs Score for Penn.

Penn's three touchdowns were all made by substitutes. Masters and Gentle were helpless to advance the ball and it was Perina and Collis who did the scoring. Perina went over twice—once on a forward pass from Masavage after Wilson had recovered a blocked Notre Dame kick on a run of 48 yards to the Notre Dame 7 yard line and the second time after Penn had recovered a Notre Dame fumble on the South Benders' 25 yard line.

Collis' touchdown came at the end of a march of 33 yards, 26 of which were made on a pass and a run by Smith. This run of Smith for 13 yards was one of the few gains that Penn was able to make all afternoon through the Notre Dame line. The Irish yielded only 37 yards in the entire game.

Compare those 37 with the 567 that Notre Dame made through Penn line that was thought to be strong and it can be appreciated what manner of a team wrecked Penn today. It wasn't a football team that struck the Red and Blue. It was a cyclone, and who is going to stop it?

Texas Christian Has Clean Slate by Beating Rice, 20-0

Wildcats Strong, Irish Fast, Game of the Year—Page

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 8. — [Special.] — Northwestern strength versus Notre Dame speed. This is Pat Page's conception of the impending battle between these rival football teams in Dyche stadium Nov. 22.

Page, who saw his team beaten today, 25 to 0, by Northwestern and last Saturday, 27 to 6, by the Irish at South Bend, based his deductions on those engagements. In each Indiana lost by four touchdowns.

"Northwestern has greater strength," he said in the dressing room after his disheartened players had dressed. "Notre Dame has greater speed. I believe Northwestern has a more accurate passing attack. We were able to cope with Notre Dame's passes more successfully, although the necessity of playing eight men in the line this afternoon weakened our secondary defense.

Although Rentner, the ace of the Northwestern passing attack, did not play, Bruder and Hanley filled his position commendably.

"Three of Northwestern's touchdowns today were made possible by forward passes, but then, superior line play was back of the passes. Northwestern versus Notre Dame will be the best football game of the season," Page concluded.

NEBRASKA HANDS KANSAS ELEVEN 16 TO 0 DEFEAT

Lawrence, Kas., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Kansas, generally picked a month ago to win the Big Six conference football championship without difficulty, fell before a powerful and at times brilliant Nebraska team here today, 16 to 0.

A homecoming crowd, swelled to more than 20,000 by Kansas anticipating a Jayhawker feast for the first time in 25 years, went home in sorrow.

Throughout the game the champion Nebraskans outplayed Kansas. A fumble by Lee Page, Kansas full back, on the second play of the game gave Nebraska its first opportunity and it continued to take them the rest of the game in the form of recovered Kansas fumbles and intercepted passes.

"Jarring Jim" Bausch, the brilliant Kansas half back, who was injured in the Pennsylvania game a week ago, went into the struggle late in the second period and remained until near its end, but his presence was not enough to pull Kansas together, although Bausch led most of what offense there was.

Nebraska scored in the first period. Red Young circling the left end for a touchdown on the fourth Cornhusker advance toward the Kansas goal.

Just after Bausch entered the game in the second period Nebraska scored again. Young passed to Hokuf, who ran over the goal line. Fraham missed the kick.

A forward pass, Fisher to Bausch, gave Kansas a 37 yard gain just before the end of the first half. Kansas failed to take advantage of two scoring opportunities in the third period, but Nebraska's goal line defense, which stopped Pittsburgh a week ago, played a part in it.

A field goal completed Nebraska's scoring in the fourth quarter, Fraham booting from his 20 yard line.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 8.—The little that Iowa salvaged from the Big Ten's early outburst of a year ago wasn't enough to stem the rush of Marquette's Golden Avalanche today. The Hawks struggled desperately against an apparently superior foe, and at times made their little threat, but in the end succumbed by the margin of a touchdown before 17,000 homecoming spectators. The score was 7 to 0.

The thrust that ended the possibilities of a scoreless tie didn't start until the third period was in its waning moments. It was concluded before the fourth quarter was a minute old. After that it was mainly a matter of kicking with each faction producing modest advances. Prior to that there had been more kicking, linked with a vain Hawkeye drive to Marquette's one foot line, and a passing attack by Marquette that missed a touchdown only by one step.

Hilltop Line Stops Hawks.

What stopped Iowa was the line it had to assail in its efforts to advance. Its backs, some of them survivors of the athletic house cleaning last year, were hard runners and dangerous. But their gains were seldom for more than a few yards at a time. And Iowa's passing game, which was badly needed when its rushing attack failed, was merely a gesture. The Hawks threw the ball ten times and only once were they successful. It netted them nine yards. Three of them were intercepted, but Iowa didn't intercept any of Marquette's heaves. The latter completed four in 15 attempts.

Marquette's idea of a pass was a throw for distance. They tried one after another for as high as 45 yards, once throwing four in succession. Failure, however, didn't halt them. They continued the stunt until it succeeded, and it was the success of it that led to the day's lone touchdown.

Late in the third period Iowa kicked after a fumble had halted the Golden Avalanche with a touchdown only 18 yards distance. Marquette took the kick on its own 47 yard line, and the winning march got under way immediately.

Fitzgerald Grabs Pass.

McElligott threw a couple of passes which grounded. Marquette took a penalty and threw another pass. This one was grabbed by the redoubtable John Sisk, a Chicago athlete, and he made it first down on Iowa's 42 yard mark. With McElligott again in the passing role, the ball went sailing diagonally across the chalk marks and Joe Fitzgerald, another youth who did his football prepping in Chicago, caught it somewhere around the 15 yard line.

When young Fitz finally was brought down by Hickman, he was only a foot removed from the scoring line. As a matter of fact he had turned his way over, but the whistle had blown, so the touchdown was delayed. The period ended just as Fitz made his thrilling catch, so the actors switched to the opposite corner of the field, where for a few moments it looked as if Iowa was going to dodge disaster.

The fourth period started with Deig, Marquette's battering full back, trying to collect the glory of a touchdown. He dove into the middle of the Iowa wall and failed to advance an inch. He rammed center again and this attempt was as futile as the other. Then the Golden Avalanche did what it should have done the period previous. Ronzani was summoned for a cross slice inside Iowa's right tackle, and he wasn't stopped until he had scored a touchdown. Grasey came into the game to kick the placement for the extra point which concluded the day's scoring.

What gave Iowa its one real scoring opportunity was a fumble by McElligott, the Marquette quarter, just after the second period had started. The ball squirted from under his arm as he was heading through tackle. It rolled toward the Marquette goal and Fitz recovered for the Hawks on the three yard line. Leo Jensvold and Kenneth Hickman, a back who may be heard from in future games, reduced the yardage to a matter of inches. Sansen tried to plunge and got a foot. Then Warrington looked for an open door at his right tackle, but didn't find it, and Marquette took possession of the ball.

The incident that cost Marquette a touchdown by one step of a running attack, came late in the second quarter. It began with a poor Iowa punt which put them on the defensive on their 18 yard line. With time getting short, Neilson heaved a long pass, but Hickman knocked it down. Neilson tossed another and it grounded. He threw one more without connecting. It turned loose the fourth one from the 45 yard line and it shot into the end zone where Homkemp caught it, but just as he wrapped his arms around the ball, he stepped out of bounds.

on Northwestern's two yard line. Then Red Woodworth, kicking from behind his own goal, booted far down the field to Indiana's 24 yard line, a net gain of 72 yards.

Bruder Makes Final Tally.

This punt and a later 15 yard penalty for holding forced the Hoosiers back until Northwestern took the ball on a kick on Indiana's 38 yard line late in the fourth period. Bruder to Hanley, a lateral pass, gained nine yards. Moore plunged for a first down and Bruder repeated the lateral pass, this time to Moore, to advance to Indiana's 18 yard line. On second down Hanley ran far to the right, pivoted and passed to Bruder on his left as Hank stood in the end zone. The score had reached its final status, 25 to 0, for the final placement failed when McDonald passed poorly from center.

Northwestern gained 364 yards from scrimmage while the Hoosiers registered a total of 126 yards.

How First Downs Were Made.

Twelve of Northwestern's first downs were from running plays. Passing brought three more and a penalty produced one. Indiana completed its distance six times on straight football, twice on passes, and twice by penalty.

Seven of Northwestern's 11 forward passes were completed for a gain of 111 yards. Indiana completed three passes in 11 attempts for 48 yards, its third completion for 20 yards being the final play of the game.

BAYLOR HOLDS TEXAS FOR HALF, THEN LOSES, 14-0

Waco, Tex., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Held scoreless for a half by the fighting Baylor eleven, the University of Texas had enough power in the third and four periods to score two touchdowns and win a Southwest conference game here today, 14 to 0.

Had it not been for the splendid kicking of little Jack Wilson, Baylor quarter back, the Steers probably would have piled up a larger score.

Texas struck first midway of the third period, when Koy shot a short, underhand pass to Stafford, big sophomore half back, who tore through the Baylor secondary behind clocklike blocking and sprinted 53 yards for a touchdown. Blanton kicked the point.

In the final period a substitute Texas back field marched half the length of the field for a touchdown. Clewis slipped over for the score, standing up, and Perkins made the extra point.

Military Leaders See Culver Academy Vanquish St. John's

BY HOWARD BARRY.

Culver Military academy yesterday defeated St. John's, 19 to 0, in a charity football game which drew 35,000 spectators to Soldiers' field. The gathering included the governors of three states, the national commander of the American Legion, and scores of distinguished military figures. Disabled and unemployed war veterans were to receive the proceeds of the event, which was sponsored by the Cook county council of the American Legion.

By yesterday's performance, Culver broke a string of fifteen consecutive St. John victories. The Indiana boys opened up with a fast running attack which caught their opponents flat footed from the outset. Time and again Vaughan, Schulz, and Smart sliced off tackle or ran the ends for long gains, while Oliver plunged and punted with telling effect.

Oliver Scores Twice.

It was Oliver who smashed his way over the goal line for the first two touchdowns after spectacular gallops by Vaughan and Schulz had put the ball in scoring position, and his punting proved one of Culver's most potent weapons, both offensively and defensively. Nearly every exchange of kicks brought a gain of many yards for the Indiana team.

But it was Freddie Vaughan who put the greatest punch in the Culver attack. He climaxed a series of long twisting runs by slashing off tackle for 15 yards and the final touchdown of the afternoon. Throughout the game he was the hardest man on the field to stop, but Perry Schulz, a Chicago boy who is Culver's captain, ran him a close second. He hurtled through the St. John's forward wall and went spinning and pivoting to the 1 yard line at the outset, putting the ball in easy position for Oliver's touchdown smash.

St. John's Boys Game.

Though St. John's was decisively beaten, the battle never became a rout. Twice within the closing minutes of play, the breaks of the game gave Culver first downs within the shadow of the goal posts. One of these first downs was on the 8 yard line and the other on the 12 yard line. But on both occasions the St. John's boys proved they were a game bunch by stopping their opponents flat footed. Right up to the end, Bender, Wismer, and O'Hare were hammering hard at the Culver line and several long passes threatened to bring a score.

The Culver boys started with a rush. On a series of line plays they worked from their own 38 yard line to St. John's 33 yard line and, after an exchange of punts, it was Culver's ball on St. John's 27 yard line. Oliver plunged for 5 yards and on the next play Perry Schulz got loose around left end. He was finally forced out of bounds on the 1 yard line. Then Oliver took it over.

Vaughan Runs 28 Yards.

The second touchdown came as a result of a whirlwind running attack late in the second quarter. Vaughan circled his own left end for 28 yards and then Schulz went around the other wing for 24 more. After two plunges gained only 4 yards, Oliver dropped back to pass, but was forced to run with the ball instead, making 7 yards and first down on the 19 yard line. Two line plays gained 5 yards and then Vaughan went around end to the 3 yard line. Schultz added two more and Oliver plunged for a touchdown. A moment later Oliver kicked goal to make the score at the half: Culver, 13; St. John's, 0.

Culver continued its fast running game after the intermission. Vaughan got away for a 25 yard gallop and then three plunges made first down on St. John's 30 yard line. Smart circled end to the 15 yard line, and on the next play Vaughan went off tackle for a touchdown.

Governors See Game.

The game was preceded by a military pageant, in the course of which the cadet corps of both schools passed in review before Gov. Emmerson of Illinois, Gov. Kohler of Wisconsin, Gov. Leslie of Indiana, and Ralph T. O'Neil, national commander of the American Legion.

CARNERA SHOWS ROMANS HOW HE MADE FORTUNE

ROME, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Primo Carnera got a mild reception tonight as he made his first appearance in the ring in Italy since his return from America. He appeared in an exhibition as the Italian boxing federation refused to sanction a fight against any available opponent.

The fans who partly filled the house gave him a half minute of applause before he went through a series of training exercises and boxed a round apiece with three smaller opponents, one of whom fell flat on his back without being touched in his efforts to keep away from massive Primo.

Vanderbilt Wins Over Georgia Tech, 6 to 0

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Vanderbilt's Commodores won their annual game with Georgia Tech here today, 6 to 0, in a contest marked by frequent fumbles, wild passing and hard line play. Vanderbilt scored its touchdown early in the second period as Askew scooted around left end for 20 yards after snatching a lateral pass from Thomas.

DE PAUW GOES TO BOSTON FOR 22-7 VICTORY

Boston, Mass., Nov. 8.—(AP)—After a trip half way across the country, De Pauw was not to be beaten today and flashed a last minute offensive which carried the Indiana school to a 22 to 7 victory over Boston university. The game was costly to both teams, as Ewing of De Pauw suffered a fracture at the elbow and Hootstein, one of B. U.'s outstanding grid figures, suffered a broken rib.

MILLIKIN ROUTS ILLINOIS COLLEGE ELEVEN, 45 TO 9

Decatur, Ill., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Millikin university's football team moved a step nearer a Little 19 championship by drubbing Illinois college, 45 to 9, before 2,500 homecomers here today.

Corbett and France shared honors in Millikin's attack, the former making one 45 yard run for a touchdown.

Penalties marred the play, four Millikin touchdowns being called back for violations. Illinois college beat Millikin, 6 to 6, last year.

PITTSBURGH NIPS CARNEGIE, 7-6, BEFORE 50,000

Tully Blocks Tech Kick for Extra Point.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 8.—(AP)—The University of Pittsburgh defended its city football championship at the stadium this afternoon by defeating Carnegie Tech, 7 to 6, before 50,000. Pittsburgh carried the fight to Carnegie most of the way.

Charley Tully, veteran Pitt tackle, prevented Tech from sharing a tie when he blocked a place kick for the extra point in the final period after Karcis had made a touchdown.

Pitt Stages Long Drive.

Pitt scored in the second period after a 55 yard drive. Heller, Reider, Clark, and Hood advanced through the Carnegie line for long gains. A 15 yard pass went to Hood, who went over for the touchdown. Capt. Eddie Baker kicked for the point.

Costly penalties forced Pittsburgh to punt in the second period, but Rosenzweig recovered on the Pitt 3 yard line when Hood fumbled. The ball was advanced to the one foot line, where a determined Pitt machine held Reider Halts March.

Pitt broke up a Tech threat in the first period when Reider intercepted a pass on his own 26 yard mark after a pass and Eyth's plunging had taken the oval to the Panther 34 yard line.

The victory left Pitt to face Ohio State and Penn State with only one defeat on its record. It was the third setback for Carnegie, which has lost to Notre Dame, also victor over Pitt, and New York university. Lineup and summary:

LEHIGH, 13; PRINCETON, 9

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 8.—(AP)—For the first time in their 43 years of rivalry Lehigh defeated Princeton here in Palmer stadium today, 13 to 9. Lehigh scored two touchdowns in the the opening quarter, while Priceton scored its only touchdown in the second, annexing two additional points in the final period on a safety.

The Tigers outplayed the Engineers in every period, having a total of 18 first downs to 4 for the visitors, but as has been the case all season, they were unable to supply the necessary punch when near the goal line.

The Lehigh scores came before the first period was half over on 60 yard dashes by Halstead and Clark. The former made his gain off tackle while Clark intercepted a pass. The Tiger attack got going in the second quarter and after being repulsed once in the shadow of the goal Knell crossed the line on an off tackle plunge.

COLGATE, 54; COLUMBIA, 0.

New York, Nov. 8.—[U. P.]—Colgate relentlessly flattened a game but weak Columbia football team here today, 54 to 0. Macaluso, one of the country's outstanding scorers and a potential candidate for the All-American back field, and Capt. Hart proved too fast and deceptive for Columbia, whose roster lacked the name of Ralph Hewitt, back field star injured in last week's game with Cornell.

Soon after the kickoff Hart and Macaluso started tearing up the Columbia line. In the first period Colgate led, 33 to 0. In the next period Colgate put in virtually an entire new team. Even then Columbia could not stem the visitors, who scored two more touchdowns.

In the third period De Salvo, an excellent broken field runner, replaced Abruzzino as Colgate's quarter back. Within a short time he guided his team down the field and himself went over for a touchdown.

GEORGETOWN, 20; BOSTON, 19.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 8.—[U. P.]—Georgetown defeated Boston college, 20 to 19, here today in a game featured by a brilliant forward passing duel. Three of the six touchdowns scored during the contest were made by passes, and another was made possible by an aerial advance.

Georgetown, with Scalzi and Johnny Bozek throwing, completed 11 of 15 forwards attempted, while Boston college, with Colbert and Boehner tossing, made 8 of 19 passes tried good. The best individual effort in the game was a 80 yard run for touchdown by Bozek of Georgetown in the final period.

DARTMOUTH SUBS WIN.

Hanover, N. H., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Dartmouth continued its undefeated season by a 43 to 14 defeat of previously unbeaten Allegheny. With Cornell in the offing Coach Cannell did not use his varsity eleven. As it was, the second and third string men provided plenty of defensive practice for the Pennsylvanians.

Dartmouth chalked up 33 points in the first quarter. Cannell sent his third string outfit into the game in the second period. Allegheny braced and marched 65 yards for the first touchdown against Dartmouth this year.

PENN STATE, SYRACUSE TIE.

State College, Pa., Nov. 8.—[U. P.]—Penn State and Syracuse battled to a scoreless tie here today, neither team having sufficient punch to score. A crowd of 5,000, among whom was Lieut. Gov. Arthur H. James, witnessed the contest.

The Nittany Lions twice were within Millikin's attack, the former making one 45 yard run for a touchdown.

Penalties marred the play, four Millikin touchdowns being called back for violations. Illinois college beat Millikin, 6 to 6, last year.

Now Perhaps All Fans Won't Want 50 Yard Line Seats

BY EDWARD BURNS.

Col. Jay Wyatt, who is, among other things, a football head linesman by trade, has just completed a research of 13 years' duration and has come to the conclusion that football bugs who must have their seats on the 50 yard line are misguided creatures in addition to whatever else they may be.

Col. Wyatt has been head linesman in scores of Big Ten, Pacific coast, eastern seaboard and southern conference contests in recent years, and has discovered that nothing important ever happens on the 50 yard line. Therefore he holds that all the perpetual clamor about seats on the 50 yard line is perfectly silly.

What Col. Wyatt's Discovery Reveals.

"I have checked very carefully," says Col. Wyatt, "and have discovered the following:

"1. All touchdowns are made over the goal line.

"2 All points after touchdown, if kicks, are kicked between the goal posts at the end of the end zone.

"3. All do or die defensive stands are inside the 20 yard line and mostly between the five yard line and the goal line.

"4. Ninety per cent of the slick and intricate scoring plays are executed inside the 20 yard line.

"5. All safeties are scored over the goal line.

"6. The best punts are the ones that go out of bounds inside the ten yard line, and the most tense punts are the ones that are kicked from behind the goal line."

Col. Wyatt says that he has tons of additional statistics bearing on individual plays, but holds that the foregoing "conclusive half dozen" observations are sufficient to clinch his argument that folks who have seats on the 50 yard line have been cheated.

Better to See All Plays Fairly Well, or What?

"The poor chumps who have been thinking they had good seats when they were on the 50 yard line probably figured it was better to see all the plays fairly well rather than to see some of the plays perfectly and others not at all," we said to Col. Wyatt, a bit slyly perhaps.

But Col. Wyatt floored us with the following comeback:

"You've heard the expression, 'Jack of all trades and master of none.' Well, it's the same principle."

Col. Wyatt further clinched his argument by saying that baseball patrons prefer to be off first or third base rather than behind the plate and that in major league parks higher admission is charged for seats off the foul lines than in the center field bleacher.

Bit Confusing and a Little Tardy, Too.

As we think over the whole thing, we are a bit confused; but it strikes us that Col. Wyatt is a little tardy in announcing his discovery, what with all the people who already have been trying to get seats on the 50 yard line for the Notre Dame-Northwestern and Notre Dame-Army games.

If he had made this discovery earlier it would have cut down a lot of clamoring in these two instances alone, to say nothing of conditions elsewhere.

All this, however, is preliminary to an announcement which THE TRIBUNE sports editor has asked us to make.

The announcement is that neither he, nor any member of his staff, is a brother-in-law or even a distant relative of Art Haley, ticket manager at Notre Dame, or Max Hayford, who holds the same job at the Evanston institution.

Would Like to Aid a Pal, but Ixnay!

The sports editor also hints that the war cry of the indirect ticket seekers, "Of course, I want to pay for 'em," is no solution to the ticket problem in so far as THE TRIBUNE is concerned.

All of us like to help a pal in any emergency and any one who wants to come out to the house for dinner some Sunday is perfectly welcome.

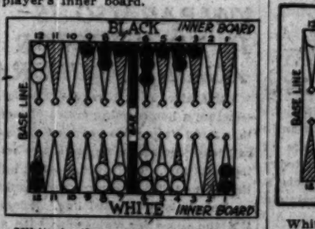
But on the ticket thing: Ixnay! Ixnay!

First Moves Learned, Novice Grasps Idea of Backgammon

(This is the sixth of a series on articles on backgammon. Another will appear next Sunday.)

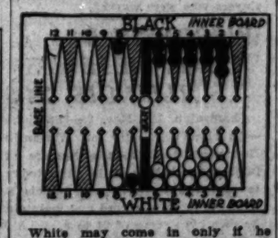
BY DR. O. E. VAN ALYEA.

The initial moves once learned, the beginner may feel free to play, and in so doing is soon able to grasp the general idea of the game. As previously stated, backgammon is a game of points. In making points a player is protecting his men and at the same time advancing them on their way around the board. If sufficient points are made, one or two of the adversary's men may be cornered in the player's inner board.



White in the accompanying diagram has formed a five point blockade which is a desirable achievement. He now will attempt to extend his block to six points, thereby forming a "side prime" and hamming in Black's two lone men. Black must accept the situation philosophically, and go about quietly "building his own board" and trusting that he eventually may have a shot at a White blot. Should White finally expose a blot and Black shake a number which allows him to place a man on that space, the man so hit is taken up and placed on the bar.

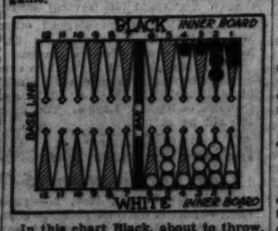
He only reënters the game when White shakes a number which allows him to come in on a vacant space in Black's inner board. This finally accomplished, he must make the complete tour around the board to join his mates in his own inner board. Black's success in this case would depend upon the condition of his inner board. If he had succeeded in covering a sufficient number of points, White might have a tough time reentering his man. His predicament is depicted herewith.



White may come in only if he shakes an ace and then he must shake a six before he can be on his way.

In the meantime Black is slipping his last two men out through White's shattered defense, and will hurry them around to the attack. He will attempt to close up his last open space, the ace point. Then as his last man goes over the bar into his inner table he start removing them from the board. If White's blot still is out of the game the six point is uncovered first, if possible, so as to eliminate this man as a further menace.

The five point next is uncovered and so on down until White finally enters his man and is out of the way. In this process of removal of the men, the finals of each game, the men are moved from the points corresponding to the numbers thrown. If there are no men on the number thrown and the number is so high that the man farthest from the ace point cannot be moved up that man may be taken off. The player who first removes all of his men wins the game.



In this chart Black, about to throw, has considerable advantage and should win easily. White, however, still may win should he succeed in shaking double sixes, than double fours or better, then double deuces or better.

Beloit, Wis., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Before a homecoming crowd of 1,000, Lawrence defeated Beloit college in a Big Four conference game here today, 9 to 0. A safety after a Beloit fumble and a 60 yard return of a punt by Fischl accounted for all the scoring in the fourth period. Lineup:

Madison, Wis., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Two University of Wisconsin teams swamped South Dakota State here today, 58 to 7. The Badgers made nine touchdowns and kicked four goals. The game was witnessed by 5,000, a large number being Boy Scouts.

Badgers March 70 Yards.

The visitors won the toss and chose the south goal, favored by a strong wind. Wisconsin kicked off and quickly forced a punt. Then starting on their 30 yard line, the Badgers marched 70 yards in seven plays for their first score, Gnabah going over on an 18 yard run and kicking the goal. Wisconsin kept the ball in South Dakota territory during the remainder of the period, but failed to score again.

In the second quarter an unbroken march of 64 yards gave Wisconsin a second touchdown. Oman went over on a short line plunge. McGuire ran 25 yards for another on a triple pass play.

Start New Team.

Starting an entirely new team after the intermission, with only Lusby and Schneller from the varsity playing in this outfit, Wisconsin scored six more touchdowns and kicked three goals.

Schneller and Lusby led in ripping through the weak Jack Rabbit line and sweeping off tackle. Schneller got into action on the third play of the period when he intercepted a pass and ran 25 yards for a touchdown. Wimmer plunged over for another score soon after, following a 65 yard march. Then Schneller made another score, following a 50 yard drive to which he contributed some 30 yards.

A touchdown by Lusby and a pair by Rebholz in the final period ended the scoring.

MICHIGAN STATE WINS, 19-11

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 8.—[U.P.]—A badly demoralized Michigan State football team pulled itself together this afternoon after Bob Monnett, its sophomore half back, reeled off a dazzling 55 yard run for a touchdown, and went on to defeat North Dakota State, 19 to 11.

Michigan State took the lead in the first period with a touchdown, and then was forced to down the ball behind its own goal line for two safeties in the second quarter.

Both teams scored in the third period, and the count was 12 to 11, with the Michigan eleven leading. North Dakota was threatening at every moment until Monnett's run, which ended the scoring and put the needed fight into the Spartans to stand off Dakota's last minute rushes.

DETROIT CROSSES FORDHAM GOAL, BUT LOSES, 13-7

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 8.—(AP)—After three periods of ineffective football, Fordham come to life with a bang in the final period, scored two touchdowns and trounced the University of Detroit, 13 to 7, here today to keep their record clean. Approximately 20,000 persons watched the contest under ideal weather conditions.

But for a sensational 75 yard run by Bill O'Neill, sparkling left half back of the Detroit team, Fordham's battering rams would have kept intact their reputation of an uncrossed goal line.

O'Neill, intercepting a pass from Fisher, Fordham quarter back, in the second period, gathered the oval into his arms on the Detroit 25 yard line and stepped the distance to the goal line untouched by Fordham players. Rocky Parsaca drop kicked the extra point for what proved to be the last scoring of the day for the home team.

The fourth period was only a few minutes old when Fordham, after an exchange of punts, got possession of the ball and took it to the Detroit 25 yard line. At that point Janis, who had replaced McMahon at Fordham right half, furnished the spark of a battering attack that carried the oval to the Titan 4 yard line. On the next play Janis circled right end for a touchdown. Wisniewski's place kick for extra point was low.

The Fordham attack got going again after the kickoff and the second touchdown came through in short order, this time on a pass from Fisher to Janis.

Southern Methodists Beat Texas A. and M., 13 to 7

Dallas, Tex., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Southern Methodist university's football team today broke into the Southwest conference victory column for the first time, defeating Texas A. and M., 13 to 7. The Aggies completely outplayed the passing Methodists in the last quarter, marching from their own 19 yard line to a touchdown.

BEARS TO BATTLE LEAGUE LEADING PACKERS TODAY

Green Bay Rooters, Band Accompany Team.

Starting Lineups

PACKERS.		BEARS.
Dilweg	L. E.	Johnson
Hubbard	L. T.	Lyman
Michalske	L. G.	Schwartz
Earpe	C.	Trafton
Dowd'n	R. G.	Franz
Sleight	R. T.	Fanly
Nash	R. E.	Drury
Dunn	Q. B.	Sternaman
Lewellen	L. H.	H. Grange
Engleman	R. H.	Lintzenich
Lidberg	F. B.	Nagurski

The Green Bay Packers, champions of the National Pro Football league, and more than 3,000 Wisconsin fans, including the Green Bay Lumberjack band, arrived last night for the contest with the Bears at Wrigley field this afternoon.

The game, the high spot of the local season, promises to be a terrific battle with the Bears at full strength and the Packers bolstered by the addition of three players, Pape, Haycraft, and Franta, purchased this week from the Minneapolis Red Jackets.

Early in the season the Packers beat the Bears, 7 to 0, for the sixth straight since they began playing in Green Bay, to make their string of victories 3 to 6 over the Bears. Four games since the first clash in 1921, resulted in ties. That 7 to 0 contest was the fifth time the Packers blanked the local eleven.

Giants on Packers Heels.

With the New York Giants on the heels of the Packers, the latter cannot afford to lose to the Bears. That they face a chance of tasting defeat is conceded even by the most rabid Green Bay adherents, especially those who saw the first game this year.

Bronko Nagurski will be at full back today and will be in opposition to Cully Lidberg, who, like the Bronko, was a star line crasher at the University of Minnesota. When they vied for honors in Green Bay Nagurski had a little the better of it.

Verne Lewellen, the district attorney half back, will engage in a punting bout with the Bears' new half back, Joe Lintzenich, whose boots have been a feature this season. Lewellen, a veteran of seven years' standing with the Packers, rated All-American pro honors last year, along with Augie Michalecke, tackle, and Lavie Dilweg, end, who is a state representative from the Green Bay district.

Dunn Also Veteran

Lewellen is a Republican and Dilweg, a Democrat. But there is no politics on the Green Bay squad.

Red Dunn will direct the Packers' attack, and he, too, is a veteran of seven years' service with the team. He will match wits with Joey Sternaman, who will start, and Brumbaugh, ex-Florida U. man, who probably will finish or vice versa.

Four of the best ends in the business will be seen in action. Nash will play opposite Dilweg and they will be opposed by Johnson and Drury. All are more than 6 feet 2 inche in height and average around 200 pounds in weight.

Green Bay has enjoyed a long run of triumphs, winning 21 out of its last 23 games, being tied twice. The team has not tasted defeat since November, 1928, when Frankford eked out a 3 to 0 victory.

Georgia Keeps Its Slate Clean; Whips N. Y. U.

New York, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Georgia's football team held its place among the country's unbeaten machines this afternoon by gaining a 7 to 6 victory over New York university.

The white jerseyed southerners, drilled in Notre Dame's tricky shift plays, outplayed the New York eleven throughout most of the game, but barely held off a great closing bid in which four passes by the home team clicked for long gains.

With the ball on the Georgia 17 yard line and only about 30 seconds left to play, Jim Tanguay hurled a pass in a final bid for victory, but Jack Roberts, Georgia's full back, intercepted the ball on his own 2 yard line and a highly exciting game ended an instant later. Forty-two thousand attended.

Georgia came from behind like a team of champions to win with a touchdown and extra point in the third period after N. Y. U. had tallied a touchdown in the second. Both scores were made by the aerial route.

WEST VIRGINIA BEATS KANSAS AGGIES, 23 TO 7

Morgantown, W. Va., Nov. 8.—(AP)—West Virginia university defeated a heavier Kansas Aggie team here today, 23 to 7.

Ten thousand fans, a bit flustered in the opening minutes by the way the Big Six conference visitors hammered through to a seven point lead, gained courage as the Mountaineers hurriedly deadlocked the issue in the same first period.

Then in the third quarter West Virginia twice raced across for counters. To make victory complete the easterners piled into the Aggies' line of superior poundage in the fourth period, split it apart, and tossed an Aggie for a safety as a defensive gesture.

In the first minutes the Aggies, benefiting from an exchange of punts, started from West Virginia's 39 yard line. On the four yard mark the threat ended in a grounded pass.

Back came the Aggies to recover a fumble on the enemy 38 yard line. From that point it was plunge after plunge until Swarts scored from the two yard line over center. Auker made good the extra point.

A LITTLE CARVING ON ILLINI LINE

Carver, Army back, knifes through Illini line for 12 yards in first quarter of game at Yankee stadium, New York, where the cadets routed the western conference eleven, 13 to 0, before more than 70,000. The victory enabled the cadets to even matters for last year's whipping at Champaign.

Friedman Vs. Nevers in Pro Clash Today

Benny Friedman of Michigan, aided by a collection of all-eastern stars, will battle Ernie Nevers' Cardinals, composed of coast and middle western players, at Comiskey park this afternoon.

BENNY FRIEDMAN

The contest promises to be an individual clash between the two football greats—Friedman, the passer, and Nevers, the plunger. Each has a powerful line to work behind, and each has a capable back field to assist. The Cardinal line is heavier and in the last meeting of two teams outplayed the easterners. It is this advantage which should enable Nevers to do his work.

Friedman's advantage comes in the set of running and pass receiving backs he has beside him. Swede Wiberg, Tiny Feather, Sedbrook, Burnett, all prolific scorers, largely because of the league in scoring, having run up 224 points in nine games, an average of four touchdowns a game.

The three high point scorers of the league will be involved in today's game. Sedbrooke of New York leads with 42, while Nevers and Wiberg are tied for second with 39 each.

The Cardinals with a team which at the start of the season appeared certain to place among the first three in the league, find themselves leading the second division, with a percentage of .500. The team is determined to make the best of the rest of the season, disposing of the Giants this week. Green Bay next week, and their time honored rivals, the Bears, on Thanksgiving morning.

The two Cards who engaged in fisticuffs in the last two games have been warned by Joe Carr, league president, that another such display will put them on the sidelines for the rest of the season. Bullet Baker, who tumbled Kahl of Portsmouth to the greensward with a right to the chin, Chuck and Kassell, who clashed with two Frankford players and ended by making a pass at the referee, are the players who were warned.

WISCONSIN B TEAM DEFEATS ILLINOIS, 24-0

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—An alert University of Wisconsin B football team took advantage of fumbles and breaks of the game today to spoil the University of Illinois B teams undefeated record and maintain its own by a score of 24 to 0.

The Badgers outrushed and out played the Illini but were able to push over only one touchdown in the first half when Anderson, half back, plunged over from eight yard mark for first score.

In the second half, Sutton, Illini back, fumbled soon after the kickoff and Mehl, Badger end, recovered for a touchdown. Feld, a substitute full back for Wisconsin, crossed the line in the third quarter after Etnyres' kick had been blocked back of the goal line, and he counted again with a touchdown plunge after Wisconsin recovered a fumble on Illinois' four yard line.

MILLS DEPEND ON LINE STRENGTH TO BEAT BROOKFIELD

The Mills professional football team has spent the week polishing its defense for the game with Brookfield this afternoon at Mills stadium. Although Brookfield has several strong backs, the line which stopped other Mills opponents is expected to perform in its usual effective manner.

Witry, Murphy and Flynn, the center trio, have played together through high school at De La Salle and through college at Loyola. The kickoff will be at 2:30.

ILLINI DEFENSE CRUMBLES IN 2D HALF; ARMY WINS

drive of the same kind to a first down at Illinois' 33 yard line.

Shakeup Cadets' Strategy.

Chet Bowman, Army's regular quarter back, another ailing member who had miraculously pulled himself together in time to play, now shook up the strategy and tried an ineffective lateral, so the boys went back to rushing. Stecker got 3 at the line and had just rounded his right end for a six yard gain when the team was sent back to midfield for illegal embracing along the line. The Army side of the stadium issued a dolorous yowl at this misfortune, for the scoring movement seemed certain to stall now. But Stecker threw a long pass and King, the substitute end, enfolded the same after an Illinois back had leaped into the air and tipped it with longing fingers.

King whirled and was downed at the Illinois 33 yard line, more than recouping the fine. On the fourth down, then, Kilday whirled through the reeling Illinois line to a first down at the 25 yard mark. Two attempts by Kilday and Bowman gained no yards, but Letzelter flipped a lateral to Stecker for 9½ yards.

Illinois Backs Exhort Line.

Kilday hit the line for a first down at the 14 yard line and the Illinois backs ran up and down behind the crouching forwards, slapping them angrily on the pants and urging them to resist somewhat. But in two plays more, Stecker went off tackle for a five yard gain and then around end to his right for a touchdown at the corner of the field. Letzelter kicked a placement true and calm, and the gray mass of the cadet section fired an explosion of noise across the yard at the Illinois side.

Although Stecker scored both touchdowns and he, alone will be remembered for them if such things are recalled to mind in after years, there were several other parties in the Army trapping, who, like Paul Revere's horse, gave vital coöperation in the triumphs. The Army's interference was swift and sure, not merely nudging men off stride, but crashing them down with positive finality, and the tackles and guards were upending the Illinois defenders apart in tumbling piles.

Clears Way for Stecker.

Moreover, some Army back, who shall be unfortunately nameless because nobody seemed able to catch his number, took out an Illinois tackler about 25 yards out when Stecker was making his second run for the goal, who certainly would have had him otherwise. This Illinois man was Overmen, the right guard, who had crossed back obliquely and was on the instant of diving for the tackle when he went to the ground so hard that he got up limp and also limping.

Hall had thrown the pass and Stecker hopped about like a cornered jack rabbit until the members of his escort could engage the oncoming Illini. Then he scampered across the field to the far sideline and down to the goal. Army missed the try for extra point.

Bodman of Illinois charmed the attendance of some 70,000 with the jazz dignity and spinning flight of his long punts, the best kicking seen around here in some years. But his team had no attack, and after the first half an adequate defense.

Fifteen teams will leave the mark at 9 o'clock tonight in Chicago's twenty-fourth international six day bicycle race in the Stadium. The field is made up of riders from America, Europe and Australia, with eight countries represented. Ten riders are strangers to Chicago fans.

The grind will exhibit riders from Italy, Germany, Belgium, France, Australia, Switzerland, Canada and America.

The new riders are Alfredo Binda, Pietro Fossati, and Raffelo Di Pocco of Italy; Roger De Nef and Adolf Charlier, Belgium; Al Crossley, Joe De Vito and Thomas Saetta, American boys; William Peden of Toronto, and Paul Buschenhagen, Germany. The best known are Binda and Buschenhagen.

Binda Road Champion.

Binda last summer won the world's road championship from a field of 500 starters, while Buschenhagen is looked upon as Germany's outstanding six day rider. He won four races last season in Europe and finished second in another. The new Belgian and Italian riders are youngsters who come to America touted for their jamming ability.

Of the fifteen teams, ten appear to have a chance to come home in front. Promoters of the race declare it is the best balanced field that ever started in a race in Chicago.

Reggie McNamara, the "Iron Man," who has won more six day races than any rider in America, 14 in all, will ride with Tony Beckman, the Jersey "pig farmer." McNamara won here just a year ago while Beckman won the last Chicago race and finished second in the last grind in Madison Square Garden. Another strong American team will be that of Freddie Spencer, thrice sprint champion of America, and Norman Hill, the California youngster. Hill never has won a six day race here, but Spencer has.

Strong Italian Team.

One of the strongest foreign teams will be the Italian duo of Franco Georgetti and Paul Brocardo. Georgetti is the highest priced rider in the race and one of the most popular. He has won the motor-paced championship of America for the last four years and also has won nine six day races in America. Brocardo is another favorite. He has finished second here several times.

Gerard Debaets and Gaetano Belloni, the Belgian-Italian combination, is another strong team. Debaets won the last six day race in Chicago and also the last one in New York, while Belloni won here just a year ago.

Ernest Kockler and Mickey Rodak will represent Chicago. Cecil Walker, six times all around champion of America, will be paired with Harris "Skippy" Horder as the Australian team. The German-Swiss team of Paul Buschenhagen and Emil Richilli will bear watching.

Many of the contestants warmed up last night in a series of special races, the results of which follow:

Half mile handicap, amateur—Won by Bobby Thomas, Kenosha, Wis. [scratch]; S. Jaloszowski, Franklin Skating and Athletic club [45 yards], second; George Thelen, Barrett A. C. [45 yards], third; Anthony Schaller, Franklin Skating and Athletic club [scratch], fourth. Time, :59 3-5.

Half mile handicap, professional—Won by Al Grassby, Boston [30 yards]; Mickey Rodak, Chicago [20 yards], second; William Peden, Toronto, Ont. [40 yards], third; Oscar Ross, Belgium [20 yards], fourth; Jimmy Walthour, New York [scratch], fifth. Time, :59 1-5.

BOWLING A MAN'S GAME? MATRON ANSWERS "NO!"

BY BETTY ECKERSALL.

Is bowling a man's game? The answer might have been in the affirmative until three years ago when Mrs. Floretta McCutcheon of Pueblo, Colo., made her debut to the bowling world by beating Jimmy Smith, champion of the United States and Canada.

The honors gained by her marvelous bowling rest lightly on the shoulders of Mrs. McCutcheon. She is too interested in teaching other women the game to stop and reflect on her achievements.

"There is a fascination to the sport that is difficult to explain," Mrs. McCutcheon said while changing trains for Waukegan, the next stop on her bowling tour of the country.

"I was practically forced into the game by the members of my club who were forming a women's league and needed another player. I had played a little golf and volley ball, but never had tried bowling. Anyway, I was elected and the game proved so interesting that I decided to try to become proficient at it."

Husband Scoffs at First.

When asked how her husband accepted the news of her desire to enter competitive bowling, Mrs. McCutcheon laughed and replied, "Well, he didn't like it. He said that a woman of 35 should not try to learn new tricks—particularly a woman with a family. But he is living at the club now, a 'bowling widower,' and apparently is none the worse for it. My daughter is in school and, of course, doesn't need me during the term."

Mrs. McCutcheon volunteered information about the finer points of the game. "Always roll, never throw the ball," she advised. "There must be the same precision in your motions that there is in golf, swimming, or any sport in which dexterity means more than strength. That is the reason bowling is a sport for all ages, for it is not too strenuous for either the young or the old. Women can become just as adept as the men, and I see no reason why some of them shouldn't be better."

Go From Golf to Bowling.

Bowling is rivaling golf as a women's sport and they are substituting the alley for the fairways, according to Mrs. McCutcheon. "It is a pleasant way to keep in trim and thin, she will inform you.

"While I am on tour I always lose weight, and when I first started to bowl I lost 40 pounds," Mrs. McCutcheon continued. "Of course, that doesn't seem awfully important, but 40 pounds when you are trying to reduce means quite a lot.

"I also have seen underweight players gain their desired poundage. Many beginners take up the game for weight purposes and later on discover the thrill of friendly competition."

Regardless of her title of the champion woman bowler of the world, Mrs. McCutcheon still is a student, and refuses to admit that she is an expert.

"No person ever will be perfect and there is always room for improvement," she said.

ATTENDANCE AT ARLINGTON RACE TRACK GOES UP

Hawthorne Also Shows an Increase.

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—The Arlington Park race track showed a greater increase in attendance than any other track to operate in Illinois this season, according to the attendance tax records now on file in the office of the secretary of agriculture. The four tracks of the Chicago district report a total paid attendance of 709,701.

The total paid attendance at Arlington this year was approximately 20,000 more than in 1929. Hawthorne also showed an increase of almost that much, but there were more racing days at Hawthorne this year than last.

The attendance on which the four major tracks paid tax this year and last is as follows:

	1929.	1930.
Arlington Park	198,472	217,579
Hawthorne	192,137	213,571
Washington Park	179,460	154,174
Lincoln Fields	134,890	124,377

There were 30 days of racing at each of the tracks, except Hawthorne. At the latter track there were 47 racing days. The above figures include only paid admissions. The pass gate attendance at some of the tracks ran as high as 3,000, at others as low as 1,000. These included the passes to owners, trainers, jockeys, stable attendants, and the track employes.

The state collects no tax from the betting, so no record of the amount of money wagered is made public. The state inspector who served at the different tracks reported, however, that the only noticeable increase in wagering was at Arlington Park.

MISSISSIPPI IS 40 TO 0 VICTOR OVER MEXICO

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Before distinguished representatives of the United States and Mexico, including the Mexican ambassador, Mississippi college today defeated the National University of Mexico, 40 to 0, in the first international football game played in Mississippi.

Holding the Mississippians to a 13 to 0 score during the first half of the game, in which Coach Robinson used second stringers, the Mexicans were overwhelmed in the last half, when Coach Robinson sent in his first string men.

Coach Root's players from Mexico, although playing only their second year of football, displayed skill that made the game more interesting than that shown by the one-sided score.

Imported Jumper Wins by Ten Lengths.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Tourist 2d, the sturdy imported jumper that races for the Sanford stud farm, furnished spectators at Pimlico an exhibition of his jumping ability here this afternoon when he administered a decisive defeat to seven other jumpers in the 2¼ miles of the Manly Memorial steeplechase, the $15,000 feature at Pimlico.

Ridden admirably by Jockey W. Hunt and carrying the crushing impost of 161 pounds, Tourist 2d, coming from behind the established pace of Thomas Hitchcock's Actor, took command at the fifteenth jump and from there reached the end of the journey leading E. R. Bradley's Beelzebub by ten lengths. In a tight fit for third honors Gracie, racing for J. F. Adams, outstayed Speckled Beauty, with Canterbury the only other member to complete the route.

Actor fell at the thirteenth fence, Rooney lost his rider at the fifteenth, and Ivory 2d, a stable mate of the winner, was the third casualty when he fell at the sixth jump.

The first of the Pimlico serial weight for age races was also decided. Of eight named overnight only four remained to try for the prize, with honors being carried off by Balko from Mrs. M. Amory's Sagamore stable. This race was worth $4,000.

RETZLAFF TO TRY K. O. WALLOP AT COLISEUM SHOW

7 Other Bouts Offered, 44 Rounds in All.

The Coliseum Boxing club has lined up a heavyweight, light heavyweight, and middleweight boxing card of eight bouts, scheduled for 44 rounds, for its fourth show of the indoor season Friday night.

Young and ambitious fighters from this country, Canada, and Europe will be paraded before the public in six six round bouts and two four round matches. There appears to be no one sided matches and the action promises to be fast and furious.

Matchmaker Jim Mullen has mixed up new faces, including two from Europe, with popular old ones.

In the headliner of the six rounders Charles Retzlaff, the Duluth heavy with a record of 30 knockouts, will meet Antonia Mata, Spanish ring fighter and bull fighter. In addition to killing many a tough bull, Mata is credited with running Paulino Uzcudun out of the Pyrenees mountains when the Basque refused to meet him in the ring.

Another new ringman in these parts is Nando Tassi, a European who boxed a ten round draw with James L. Braddock. Nassi will oppose Paul Pantaleo, idol of Tilden High graduates and south side Italians. They are in the six round semi-final in the heavyweight class.

Edgar Norman, blonde light heavyweight, will clash with Harry Dillon of Winnipeg for six rounds. Ted Ross, South Chicago swatter, and Joe Miller, kingpin of the Englewood fighters, are down for a six rounder. Both are hitters and are light heavies.

FLAVOR AND FRESHNESS SEALED IN CIGARS BY NEW

Cold-Treatment

IF EVER you've smoked an absolutely fresh cigar, just when it's new-made, you know that no other smoke can compare with it. Its fresh flavor stands out in your memory like the taste of the pies your mother used to make. And you've thought—"If only I could have cigars like that every day."

Here, then, is grand news. You can have the smoke-thrill that a fresh-made cigar gives—every day! For now Dutch Masters has solved the problem of preserving in a cigar its fresh "Peak of Perfection." The revolutionary New "Cold-Treatment" process does it!

This tradition-shattering process takes each Dutch Masters cigar just as it comes from the machine—just at the precise moment when the fine tobaccos are at their richest, blandest perfection . . .

And then seals that fresh flavor and aroma within the cigar itself, to stay there until your lighted match releases it for you, in long, satisfactory puffs!

Smoke a Dutch Masters "Cold-Treated" cigar today. And enjoy the thrill of a cigar that is as fresh and full of flavor at the moment you light it as it is at the moment it's made!

All popular sizes and shapes, 10c and up.

Dutch Masters are manufactured by the Consolidated Cigar Corp., New York, N. Y., and distributed by

P. J. RUBEY CO., 9023 Baltimore Ave., Chicago

Messrs. Wheelock, Ferris and Howard tried the new "Cold-Treated" cigar.

LINDBLOM AND PARKER ELEVENS WIN PREP GAMES

Harper Leads in Victory Over Fenger, 28-6.

Two surprises occurred in the concluding games of the regular City league schedule yesterday. Lindblom, league runner up last year, defeated its strongest central section foe, Englewood, by a 26 to 6 score, a greater margin than was expected, while Parker, always the dark horse of the south section, invaded Fenger's gridiron for a 28 to 6 victory. Fenger's defeat plunged the south section into a triple tie among Parker, Fenger, and Calumet. Lindblom's victory brought it another section title.

Englewood took the lead in the game at White City on a pass from Wolf to Patterson, but Lindblom came back in the second period. Lindblom got two points when Siskin and Finlay tackled Wolf behind his own goal for a safety. Another march brought Lindblom to Englewood's nine yard line, whence Red Mellies scored. He scored again in the third period. Ralph Mack delivered another touchdown shortly after, and Ziman concluded the scoring with a touchdown plunge in the last period. Wolf, Shewell, and Patterson featured for the losers, while Mack, Mellies, and Lazarevitch stood out for Lindblom.

Bob Harper was the hero of the Parker victory over Fenger, scoring two touchdowns on long runs and passing to Williamson for another score. Wasserman drove over for a touchdown in the last period. Stine of Parker blocked a Fenger punt in the first period for a safety.

AMONG THE FOLKS IN HISTORY

Purdue Brawn Beats Maroon Pluck, 26 to 7

be in part owing to the weakness of the opposition.

Statistics reflected the score. Purdue made 20 first downs, of which three were from passes, to four by Chicago, one of which was a pass. Purdue gained 347 yards from scrimmage and Chicago 71. Purdue completed three of nine passes for 69 yards with one intercepted. Chicago completed two of thirteen passes for 11 yards with one intercepted. Purdue was penalized 90 yards and Chicago 20. Purdue's punts averaged 34 yards and those of Chicago 37½ yards. Purdue fumbled four times and recovered once. Chicago fumbled once and recovered.

Chicago won the toss and chose the west goal. Chicago's kickoff was over the goal line and Purdue put the ball in play on its own 20 yard line, kicking on third down to Paul Stagg, who returned 25 yards to Purdue's 35 yard line.

Buzzell spun through the line for first down on Purdue's 27 yard line. Purdue rubbed its eyes, Purdue's offside was offset by a clumsy fumble and Purdue took the ball on downs at its 25 yard line. Pope's punt was partly blocked and went out of bounds at the 20 yard line. Another chance for the Maroons. On fourth down with four to go, Knudson was stopped by the now aroused Boilermakers.

Boilermakers Start March.

Then Purdue began a march from its own 15 yard line to Chicago's 43 yard line, where a fumble was recovered by the alert Maroons. Thereafter the oval alternated on punts until Pope shot a pass over the scrimmage line to Merz. It bounded from his hands directly to Buzzell, who then made a beautiful dodging run, aided by blockers, to the Purdue one yard line. Knudson crashed over and Wallace place kicked the extra point.

With a few seconds to play and Purdue on its own 49 yard line, Risk passed to Chasey, who stopped at Chicago's 33 yard line. The next pass, Risk to White, grounded and the gun said the half was over, but a Maroon lineman was offside. Then Risk passed to Chasey in the scoring zone. Chasey missed the additional point.

Risk Scores Touchdown.

On third down after the kickoff in the second half, Horstman found a hole, then zigzagged through the Maroon secondary until brought down from behind by Wallace at Chicago's seven yard line. On the next play Risk went around his own left end for the count. White missed goal. Purdue now led, 12 to 7.

Purdue's third count came soon after. It was earned twice. Knudson's punt was blocked by Van Bibber and Purdue recovered at Chicago's 13 yard line. Risk broke through and ran behind the final line, but the ball was brought back and Purdue penalized 15 yards for holding.

Risk then made a first down at Chicago's 16 yard line. Risk completed a pass to White at Chicago's 2 yard line. Horstman went through guard for the count. Van Bibber kicked goal.

The final marker came early in the fourth period, following a march from Purdue's 35 yard line straight down field by a plunging running attack to Chicago's 5 yard line, where Horstman again crashed through for the remaining distance. Van Bibber kicked the additional point.

Michigan Pass Beats Harvard Eleven, 6 to 3

which almost brought a score in the first period. The Michigan quarter back heaved a 33 yard pass to Johnny Wheeler, who advanced to Harvard's eight yard line before he was downed.

In the third period a 33 yard pass from Wood to Art Huguley, followed by line plunges by Huguley and Johnny Crickard, saw Harvard approach within 11 yards of Michigan's goal. A penalty on the Crimson for delaying the game forced them back, and Wood elected to try for a field goal. His effort got away nicely enough, but Maynard Morrison, Michigan's center, blocked the kick in midair. The ball rolled back to Michigan's 33 yard line, where the Wolverines recovered. The Harvard line held and Michigan punted.

Wood Kicks Field Goal.

Then Harvard started a third march, this time to a score. After Crickard tried the line for five yards, Wood threw a 20 yard pass to Huguley, who advanced 20 yards more before being downed on Michigan's 10 yard marker. Harvard tried two futile thrusts at the line before the period ended and signalized the start of the fourth quarter with another attempt at the Michigan wall, which repulsed the attack for a five yard loss. With the ball on a difficult angle with the goal, Wood went ten yards behind the line and kicked between the uprights.

Harvard received Michigans' kick after the score and relinquished the ball after several small gains off tackle. Huguley punted to Michigan's 33 yard line and from there the Wolverines inaugurated the offensive that brought them victory.

Wheeler and Newman combined to bring the ball to Harvard's 45 yard line on straight rushes, and then Newman shot his pass to Hudson who galloped over a clear field for the score.

Harvard responded to this unexpected turn of events, and wearied the Wolverines with an overhead volley that just missed bringing in another score.

SUMMERALL AND HURLEY DISCUSS SERVICE GAME

Washington, D. C., Nov. 8.—(AP)—Secretary Hurley today began consideration of the question of the resumption of athletic relations between the army and naval academies.

The war secretary conferred with Gen. Charles P. Summerall, chief of staff, but both declined to comment after their meeting. They had before them appeals for both a post-season football game this year to raise unemployment funds and a regularly scheduled game in 1931.

Grover Whalen, acting for a New York citizens' committee, attempted to complete arrangements for a Navy-Fordham football game as an unemployment benefit.

"Inasmuch as the Army has declined to play, a game with Fordham seems possible," Secretary Adams said.

BUSINESS MEN CLOSE DESKS TO SHOOT AT DUCKS

Becker Says to Blame Urge on Cave Men.

BY BOB BECKER.

When business men throughout the United States close their desks and invade the marshes at this time of the year to work off their hunting fevers they can offer a good excuse. Blame it on evolution. Digging deep behind this hunting urge one can safely blame evolution.

Thousands of years ago our ancestors had to hunt to live. Day after day they tracked, killed, and trapped animals for food and clothing. Hunting was a business. Sometimes too serious a business as, for example, when our prehistoric ancestors had to battle with some giant and happily now extinct beast that was more than a match for them and their crude stone weapons.

Hunting Urge Remains.

Down through the ages has come this hunting business as a vital part of everyday life. From the stone age man down to this time is but a step in history, so the hunting urge in our present day civilization is still strong.

However today it is a sport and hunting enthusiasts trail deer, buck snow and cold, climb mountains for mountain sheep, flounder through marshes, and do lots of crazy things to "answer" evolution's call.

Considering Illinois and a large city like Chicago we find that evolution has left its mark on "the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, and doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief" if you call the roll among the duck hunters. For example, both Gov. Emmerson and Secretary of State Stratton are ardent duck hunters. They will spend time in blinds banging away at the mallards this fall.

Simpson Duck Hunter.

State street, Chicago's famous retail shopping center, contributes many gunners to the duck blinds. James Simpson, head of the Chicago Plan commission and prominent State street executive, flew down to the Sangamois club a few days to get his limit of mallards. Walter C. Peacock and Sidney Lebolt, two executives of well known State street houses, also are enthusiastic duck hunters. When we chatted with John T. Pirie a few days ago he was about to close his desk in the executive offices to go to the Grand Island club on the Illinois river to bag some ducks.

La Salle street, Chicago's financial center, also loses some of its executives to the duck shooting army at this time of the year. A number of them have their own shooting clubs in the Illinois river country. One bank that we know of on La Salle street sends three vice presidents to the "trenches" every November in order that they can bang away at the waterfowl.

DETROIT-WINDSOR MOTOR TUNNEL OPEN TO TRAFFIC

First International Bore of Its Kind.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—A vehicular tunnel under the Detroit river, connecting the wet Canadian province of Ontario with dry United States, was dedicated here last week.

Built by private capital, yet controlled by governmental agencies, the Detroit-Canada tunnel was a tremendous undertaking. It necessitated the expenditure of approximately $25,000,000 and makes possible the crossing of the Detroit river by three routes, the Ambassador bridge, which was opened to the public just one year ago; the new tunnel, and the picturesque ferry boat, which for the last few years was unable to cope with the ever increasing automobile traffic into and out of Canada. Up to one year ago, when the Ambassador bridge became available a several hours' wait and a line of automobiles two or three miles in length was a common occurrence. But all this has been eliminated and the crossing of the international waterway is made with the same rapidity as touring on a super highway for which Wayne county, in which Detroit is located, is famous.

The tunnel alone has a capacity of 1,000 automobiles per hour in each direction, the only detention being the passing of customs officers. This, however, has been reduced to a minimum by the many lanes available after leaving the mouth of the tunnel.

Only International Tunnel.

This new tunnel is the only one in the world to connect two countries, and with but one exception—that being the Holland tunnel in New York which connects New York and New Jersey—it is the largest tunnel in America and that, of course, means the world.

The length of the tunnel is 5,135 feet over all, approximately one mile, the river section being 2,200 feet and the width of the roadway 22 feet. The American portal is but a few hundred feet from the very heart of the retail and financial district of Detroit, while the Canadian end is located in the center of Windsor's rapidly advancing business district. There is an extra traffic lane for emergency use and a wide foot walk.

Ventilation is perfect and has been designed to keep air in the tunnel purer than in the streets outside. Two ventilating towers have been constructed, one at each end, at a cost of $2,000,000, and each structure provides fresh air for its half of the tunnel. The equipment consists of motor driven fresh air fans and exhaust fans arranged in successive tiers in different stories with direct connection to the subway ducts. Each fan is 12 feet in diameter and there are 12 of them in each building, six blower fans to draw in fresh air and six exhaust fans to expel used air and automobile gases. There is a complete change of air in the tunnel every ninety seconds. Air comes to the tunnel under the roadway, escaping through curved apertures near the curb line. Used or vitiated air is thrown off through two rows of openings located at frequent intervals in the ceiling.

Lowered into Place.

The river section of the tunnel consists of nine steel tubes, with an inside diameter of 31 feet and a length of each tube of approximately 250 feet. Contrary to general belief, this tunnel was not dug underneath the river bed as a whole, but a trench was dug with mammoth steam shovels, sections floated from their place of manufacture and lowered into place, and an interior lining of concrete 18 inches thick added.

A force of 25 immigration inspectors and 24 customs inspectors have been assigned to duty at the American end and a nearly equal number on the Canadian side of the river. Tunnel buses, especially built, will operate on a 30 second headway during rush hours and at other times at 3 minute intervals. A trip between the city halls in the two cities will require but five minutes, of which three minutes will be spent in the tunnel. There will be 30 buses, each with a capacity of 20 passengers. Passengers coming to Detroit will be divided into two groups at the Windsor station. One group, carrying identification cards, will be inspected by United States authorities at the Windsor terminal. These will enter special buses and will not be subject to inspection on the American side. The other group will be inspected at the Detroit end of the tube.

Guard Against Delays.

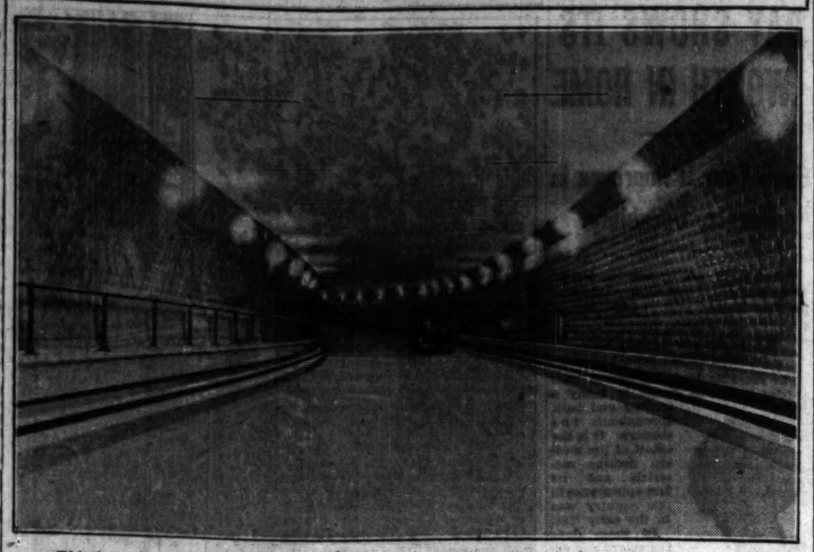
Traffic stoppages in the tunnel will be handled with a dispatch rarely achieved on the world's surface highways. This traffic—and it is anticipated that there will be plenty of it—will be handled according to the general methods which have been found so successful in the Holland tunnel in New York. Disabled cars will be removed by miniature service tractors and very moment, day and night, traffic will be safeguarded against delay.

At the international boundary line in the tunnel flags of the United States and Great Britain have been laid in the wall tile in mosaic. Bronze plaques also mark the dividing line of the two nations.

Kansas Takes Steps to Control Length of Trucks

Kansas, through its highway commission, is taking steps as a safety precaution to control big trucks and semi-trailers using the state roads. The commission has taken the position that the highways were built for the public and not for commercial trucks. The Kansas law permits 22 foot trucks to use the highways and in addition a trailer is allowed, with the maximum combined length for truck and trailer of 40 feet. Some trailers 60 feet long have been used and the highway commission, holding that they were a menace to traffic, has declined to renew the permits of a number of owners to operate. Truck owners are objecting to the action of the commission and the matter is expected to be taken to the courts to serve as a test case.

NEW DETROIT TUNNEL



This is a view of the new vehicular tunnel connecting Detroit, Mich., with Windsor, Ont. It is the only international tunnel in the world and its length of nearly a mile makes it one of the world's longest auto bores.

VOICE OF THE TRAFFIC

REPORTING A STOLEN CAR.

Chicago, Oct. 29.—Recently at 12:05 a. m. my car was stolen from in front of a friend's house. I heard the car driven off and immediately called Police 1313 to report the theft. I was told to report it to the nearest police station. On calling the nearest station I was informed that because the car was stolen from the north side of the street it was in another district and the matter would have to be reported to the station in that district. On calling the station I was told that reports were not taken over the phone and I would have to report the theft in person.

My friend and I got his car out and drove about three miles to the police station to make out the report. I knew the license number and gave all the required information except the motor and serial number, but before any announcement would be made to the squad cars I had to go home to get the two numbers. All told, it took me one hour and fifteen minutes to "officially" report my car stolen.

It might be a good idea for some of the city officials and acting officials who are doing all the "shaking up" to shake up the speed of the recording system. If the squad cars had been notified immediately they would have had a reasonably good chance of "spotting" the car.

As it is now a thief could be many miles away before the police system starts acting. This is my first experience of this kind in ten years of driving and no doubt many Chicagoans have never had a car stolen and are ignorant of conditions. If the rest of the departments function with equal rapidity I wonder that there aren't more stickup men, robberies, and murders.

OGDEN VAN DOREN.

POLICEMEN UNINTERESTED.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—Recently while driving south on the outer drive a Negro driving an out of the state car turned left to enter the lot south of the stadium and wrecked my car.

The accident was a result of his disobeying a "no left turn" sign and so my brother-in-law ran to where some south park police were, about 100 yards away, and asked Officer —— to come over. This officer said "See the sergeant," whose number is ——, and when he was asked to come over he said, "What do you want me to do?"

My brother-in-law replied that as he was wearing a star he might do something to help and the sergeant said, "O, well, I will tell a cop to go over."

The Negro and his white girl companion, when they saw the police were not interested, said they would park their car, but instead they drove away.

The fact my wife and baby were hysterical with fright; that the other driver broke the law by turning; that he did not give his name or any satisfaction, and made his getaway, did not interest this noble sergeant and we got no help from any of the guardians of the law. We wish to take this means of thanking these protectors of Chicago citizens.

E. R. DUSTIN.

CHAUFFEUR ARRESTED.

Lake Forest, Ill., Nov. 3.—On Tuesday, Oct. 28, my chauffeur, a careful, sober, painstaking driver, was arrested by a traffic officer in Evanston near Northwestern university. It seems in passing a car he swung out too far, thus making him a "mark" for the traffic officer. He probably was driving 35 miles an hour. I was not in the car.

The chauffeur was taken to court, treated with scant courtesy, obliged to telephone to Chicago for $25 "cash bond" which, by the way, was retained, while I waited in the cold for him to appear. He is very much upset about this, not being the "hard boiled" type that laughs at traffic officers, never having been arrested before.

I feel I have been so outrageously treated that I shall never patronize another Evanston establishment while such treatment is accorded decent, law-abiding citizens. Is there any remedy for this?

MRS. ROBERT B. DICKINSON.

MORE POLITICAL JOBS.

Chicago, Oct. 30.—The national safety council, in its endeavor to educate the people to the necessity of the drivers' license law, fails to mention the amount of graft and additional expense to the already overtaxed automobilist.

Such a law if put in effect would only create more political jobs for politicians to squabble over and the graft connected with it would cost the Illinois automobile owner several hundred thousand dollars a year. An applicant for a license after failing to pass the test could very easily secure the license by purchasing it from the person appointed to give the test.

A car owner in the city of Chicago today is obligated to pay a state license fee of from $8 up, a city vehicle tax of $10, not to mention the gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon.

These facts exist in other states where the same law is in force and, after all, would it really put an end to reckless driving, deaths, and accidents? Why overburden the small automobile owner with another license fee?

AVIATION

U. S. AIR LINES MANIFEST NEW BURST OF LIFE

BY ROBERT WOOD.

While more stable and established industries are curtailing activities and settling down for a long cold winter, America's air transportation system has lately manifested a new burst of life in the extension of lines and the inauguration of new hook-ups which have substantially changed the air transportation picture.

This new growth is directly attributed to the benefits of the new Watres bill which permits the carrying of mail in passenger ships. Even more extensive alteration in the airway map is expected when the present dark chapter of economic history is closed next spring—the date set by many aviation leaders as the beginning of a new era in commercial flying.

Two Chicago-New York Services.

The recent changes have given Chicago two air services between Chicago and New York, the first in history over this route, and a third New York-Chicago line is due to be opened as soon as National Air Transport is convinced that such a service will be justified over their present mail route.

Of national importance is the inauguration last month of a second transcontinental route and the beginning of a third. After the first of the year the country will boast three transcontinental lines: Boeing Air Transport-N. A. T., the backbone of the nation's airway system, carrying the bulk of commerce and following the direct route from San Francisco through Chicago to New York; Southern Air Fast Express-Eastern Air Transport curving down from San Francisco to the southern border of the country and swinging back up through the eastern seaboard states to New York; and the Transcontinental Air Transport-Western Air route, now in its first month of operation, following a course midway between the other routes.

Transcontinental Service.

The two new Chicago-New York passenger services were made possible by connections with T. A. T.-Western Air. Embry-Riddle, established mail carrier between Chicago and Cincinnati has arranged a hook-up at Indianapolis with the transcontinental line and Continental Airways connects with the same line at Columbus, O. Passengers are transferred to T. A. T.-Western Air ships and carried on to New York.

Following a slightly circuitous route the new services cover the distance between Chicago and New York in approximately nine hours. Stops are made at Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, and Philadelphia and connections can be made with Pennsylvania Air Lines from Pittsburgh to Washington.

Transcontinental and Western Air provide a 36 hour air service between Los Angeles and New York with a night stop-over of mail and passengers at Kansas City.

The original air rail set up of T. A. T.-Maddox will still be continued, so that passengers who desire can leave New York in the early evening on the Airways Limited of the Pennsylvania railroad and go aboard the plane at Port Columbus the next morning arriving that evening at Waynoka, Okla., for another night train ride, this time on the Santa Fe.

Southern Route.

Following closely upon the new midcontinent transcontinental comes the formation of a southern transcontinental. S. A. F. E. has obtained the contract for carrying the mail between Atlanta and Los Angeles by way of Birmingham, Shreveport, Fort Worth and Dallas, El Paso, Tucson, Phoenix and Los Angeles through San Diego. It is certain that passengers will be carried as well as mail and express. Eastern Air Transport, which holds the mail contract between New York, Atlanta and Miami, is now operating passenger planes between New York and Richmond and this service will be extended in time to Atlanta to connect with the third transcontinental.

Already N. A. T. contemplates a complete passenger service over its Dallas-Chicago division, thus knitting together the three systems.

Annual Auto Salon Opens at Drake Hotel

The sixteenth annual automobile salon—an exhibition of the more expensive cars, luxurious customs bodies and accessories—opened yesterday afternoon at the Drake hotel. It will be open daily during the week, including today, from 2 p. m. to 11 p. m., and will close next Saturday.

There are about eighty exhibits which take up most of the main floor space of the Drake, including the Fountain room, Avenue of Palms, main dining room, etc.

Simplicity of lines and convertible body types were two prevalent features noticed in an inspection of the de luxe cars shown. Manufacturers represented at the exhibit assert that there is an appreciable gain in the demand among wealthy purchasers for all weather, or convertible bodies. As a result particular attention has been given this type of car.

Popular European Models.

Most of the phaetons, coupes and sedan types have the convertible feature. A few models of convertible bodies that have become popular in Europe are shown at the salon, though the European idea has been adapted to American tastes.

Bodies of cars this year are lower than ever and this has been achieved through coöperation of the chassis manufacturers with the makers of custom coaches. A number of ingenious arrangements, including footwells dropped below the chassis, help make possible the low effect.

Streamlining continues to be one of the foremost considerations of the automobile designer and evidence of the art of the designer is found at the show in the simple graceful lines of many of the cars. Sharp corners have been removed in several types to reduce wind pressure and consequently to increase speed.

Every Comfort Found.

The interiors of many of the closed cars are as luxurious as rooms in de luxe apartments. Every conceivable kind of fitting to make motoring pleasant and comfortable for womep is found. One point noted was the greater simplicity of the interior designs. The elaborately tufted upholstering formerly found this year is replaced by smooth stretched materials. Color effects are more subdued than has been the rule hitherto.

Discussing the elaborate coaches found at the salon one of the officials of the organization responsible for the exhibit had this to say:

"For some years the custom coachmaker has included within his prerogative all parts of the chassis which are in view, including wheels, fenders, bumpers, spring ends, running boards, spare tires and racks, gasoline tanks, tool boxes, etc. In the new styles and types of custom coachwork these parts have been more carefully and more artistically designed, especially from the standpoint of the ensemble effect.

Airplane Fenders.

"Slanting V shaped window shields for closed cars are now quite in vogue, and while chromium plating is extensively used for all hardware, gold and silver plating prevails on the higher priced jobs. Streamlined, airplane like sections are being adopted for projecting parts and in some of the sport models from Europe this tendency is carried to the extreme of having regular airplane fenders and wing section running boards."

Following the close of the salon here the exhibits will be taken to New York. Then the salon will go to Los Angeles and in February it will be held in San Francisco.

Automobiles exhibited at the salon are Cadillac, Chrysler, Cord, Cunningham, Duesenberg, Franklin, La Salle, Lincoln, Marmon, Packard, Pierce-Arrow, Rolls-Royce, and Stutz. Special coach work exhibits are made by Brewster, Brunn, Derham, Dietrich, Raymond H. Dietrich, Fisher, Fleetwood, Judkins, La Grande, Le Baron, Locke, Murphy, Rollston, Walker, Waterhouse, Weymann, and Willoughby.

Take Weight Off Wheels When You Grease Springs

When greasing or graphiting the springs, it is much easier to get the lubricant between the leaves of the springs by putting the jack under the end of the spring horn or shackle or jacking up the car in such a way as to take the weight of the car off the springs. Evene in case a spring leaf spreader is used, it will be much easier to use the spreader effectively if this is done.

AUTO GIVES EMPLOYMENT.

There are 4,760,000 workers dependent upon motor transportation for their livelihood.

NOW'S THE TIME TO PREPARE FOR WINTER DRIVING

It Will Save Trouble and Money.

Though there may be a good many balmy days in the time between now and the day when the calendar reads 1931, the motorist who objects to fussing around with a balky car in the cold at midnight to make it go or who is loath to make a steaming geyser of his car when the temperature eases down toward zero will be wise to go after that well known ounce of precaution immediately.

Now, when the weather is moderate, is the time to give the automobile a thorough checking over if any pleasure is to be had from winter driving. The mechanical first aid department of the Chicago Motor club has made a number of suggestions which, if followed, will save the motorist repair bills and make winter driving more agreeable.

Check Up on Radiator.

The cooling system of a car is undoubtedly its weakest part during winter, experts of the motor club assert. However, no special knowledge or skill is required to prepare this part of the car against icy blasts. The first requirement in this direction is a sound radiator and the motorist is advised to have a competent check make against leaks or weak spots.

When one is satisfied that the radiator is in good condition, inspect the hose connection between it and the motor. If any of them appear to be swollen or rotting, replace them with new parts. Regardless of whether replacements are needed, it is wise to remove old connections and to flush the radiator and water jackets in the motor separately, so as to wash out all sediment.

As regards an anti-freeze agency, there are a number available on the market which are satisfactory and a selection of any one is largely a matter of personal choice.

While a motor will function without the protection of a winter front, such a device adds immeasurably to its efficiency. Particularly satisfactory, according to motor club experts, are the winter fronts which are operated thermostatically.

A Lack of Knowledge.

The battery and general electrical system of a car suffer severe stress during the winter months and the records of the motor club indicate that a good part of the trouble is caused primarily by lack of knowledge of the motorist and secondarily by the battery. A battery must be kept fully charged during the cold weather, when the drain upon it, as a result of difficult starting, is greatest. If it is not fully, or nearly fully charged it is likely to freeze.

The way to keep the battery in good condition is to set the generator so it will charge at a rate of between twelve and fourteen amperes when the lights are off and the car is running at the rate of twenty-five or thirty miles per hour. Also the lights and starter should be used as sparingly as possible.

The distributor assembly and spark plugs play a greater part in starting a motor than many car owners suspect. Particularly after a summer of touring, the breaker points may be pitted. If so they should be "dressed" or polished, preferably on an oilstone.

Have the spark plugs checked, not only for deposits of carbon or thick, gummy oil, but for the width of the spark gap as well. Insulation of cables and wiring should be scanned. Breaks in insulation are likely to cause short circuits, with consequent damage.

Adjustment of Carburetor.

Especially important to the starting of motors during cold weather are correct fuels and lubricants. Motorists who anticipate trouble should use only gasoline with easy starting qualities. And it is advisable to have the carburetor adjusted by a mechanic.

As to oils, the agency selling the car is well qualified to advise on this point. Some cars use the same consistency of oil the year around; most, however, are designed for thinner lubricants in winter. The reason a comparatively thin oil is better in winter is because oil thickens at low temperatures. Frequently the "drag" of the pistons against the cylinder walls and other sources of friction cause an excessive load on the starter if the oil is too thick or too cold. Many manufacturers advise a lighter lubricant in the gear case and also in the differential housing. Ascertain from the agency handling the car what grade of oil or grease is best in these parts.

1931 AUTOMOBILE LICENSE PLATES NOW AVAILABLE

Application forms for 1931 automobile licenses are now available, according to an announcement from William J. Stratton, secretary of state. Secretary Stratton points out that care should be taken in executing these applications both for passenger cars and trucks, as the registration fee for passenger cars is based upon the horsepower and the fee for trucks upon the combined weight of the truck and load.

The secretary calls attention to the fact that a complete schedule of fees necessary are printed upon the reverse side of the application forms, and if there is any doubt in the mind of the applicant regarding the fees these schedules should be consulted. Every year thousands upon thousands of applications are returned to the applicants because of incorrect fees and improperly executed applications.

Ohio Limits Length of Vehicles on State Roads

Ohio has a law, just upheld by a federal court, limiting the length of vehicles on state highways to thirty feet. The object of the law is to prevent excessive obstruction of the highways on curves and at road intersections.

Ancestors of Our Present Roads Didn't Amount to Much

As last minute maps appear giving the great system of superhighways developing in Chicagoland the appearance of a giant fan with the loop, roughly, the stem, something about the predecessors of our modern concrete roads which helped to make Chicago the great commercial capital it is might be of interest.

Centuries ago, even before the birth of Christ, the highways of Rome were one of the marvels of the ancient civilization. The most famous of these Roman thoroughfares, of course, was the Appian Way which for centuries has stood, the ideal of road builders. The Roman conception of what a road should be was the ideal of highway builders in England and in the various nations of Europe and Roman roads were built in these lands.

Often 3 Feet Thick.

These highways were often three feet thick, being built of stone on a base of a rough concrete. The roads generally were built in from two to four layers, depending on the terrain of the country they traversed, but commonly they were in three layers. The Roman built their roads straight, connecting two points in the shortest possible way without consideration for obstacles. These highways are mentioned to show what has existed.

And now we take a flight through the centuries to a time early in 1800 when a small outpost of a new nation was coming into being—Chicago, a tiny settlement of courageous traders dwelling in an area that was almost a swamp. Gradually this outpost grew and venturesome pioneers from the east and south moved into the hinterland.

By its geographical position, the outpost Chicago assumed the commercial leadership of the entire region. In the early days, of course, trade consisted largely of imports from the east, with little, save furs, as exports. Then gradually the great farm empire of the Mississippi valley began to produce.

Vast Seas of Mud.

Now we come to the roads over which had to pass the very life blood of the hardy settlers. Here were no Roman roads providing for the easy passage of vehicles, but instead a vast prairie of black soil, which when the rains of spring and fall set in, were vast seas of mud which clutched man and his wagons in its grip and made transportation a torture.

In these early days land routes generally followed the trails of Indians across the countryside. These trails often followed a rather circuitous course for time was of no object to the redskin and consequently his trail was often a matter of whim. One Indian trail connected Chicago and Green Bay. Another, known as the Great Sauk trail, went eastward across Illinois from the Mississippi, around the lake and on up to the head of the lake. And there were others along which proceeded soldiers, traders and pioneers.

Later came the Chicago road which connected the then tiny outpost with Detroit. After running across the state of Michigan it went around the lake along the shore. When the beach was packed hard by heavy seas or rain travel was fine, but when the lake was calm and the weather dry then travel was as difficult as through a desert.

Better Methods Needed.

Another great travel line that developed was the Vincennes trail which started at Vincennes on the Wabash river and proceeded to Chicago over higher ground along the way. Another route was the road to Ottawa and the southwest. These were all the routes of the pioneers.

Then as the tiny town of Chicago began to develop there grew an insistent need for better methods of communication with the countryside. First roads which were built were merely earth thrown up and drained with ditches at the sides. These roads were not bad in dry weather, but when rains set in the Illinois soil developed into a glue which made travel practically impossible. The first of the roads to be constructed with the aid of the Chicago public was the Barry Point road which ran in the direction of Riverside. It was a dirt road such as used to be found in the central part of the state.

For a long time farmers and traders going to and from the city had to suffer the vicissitudes which these dirt roads entailed. Then there appeared a ray of light from Canada. Lord Sydenham, an English official who had long lived in Russia, introduced from the land of the czars the idea of a plank road.

Plank Roads Next.

Chicago took up the plank road enthusiastically and built such thoroughfares south, southwest, northwest, and north from the city. Much was expected from this type of road. We quote a few excerpts from a Voice of the People enthusiast to a Chicago paper, written in 1848, in which the writer supports the plank road as against a "new fangled railroad."

"Our plank road passengers travel at the rate of ten miles an hour, which is as fast as they are conveyed (and with ten times the safety) on the Michigan Central," he writes. "In place of railroads now agitated, construct 300 miles of plank road, divided to best advantage, say northwest and southwest. This will cost about $500,000, about what it will cost to build a good railroad to the Fox river." And then he intimates that Chicagoans would never be so crazy as to build a railroad.

But the plank roads soon proved themselves more or less of a fizzle. Often during wet weather they became rafts in a sea of mud and water, and they broke easily. Finally the railroad ended for a time the pressing need for good roads.

First Cobble Stones.

Prior to 1849 stone pavements were used in the city, but as their foundation was not sufficiently strong they sank in the mud. Then came plank roads. In 1855 the first pavement composed of limestone blocks was laid on South Water street between Wabash avenue and the Illinois Central. In the following year Wells street was macadamized from Van Buren to Congress and a cobblestone pavement was laid on Lake street from Michigan avenue to the river.

In the fall of 1856 the first pine block pavement was commenced on Wells street between South Water and Lake streets. From 1865 to 1871 little except pine block pavement was used. In 1875 cedar blocks were substituted for pine and they were used for years after. In 1880 the first compressed asphalt block pavement was laid and sheet asphalt and granite blocks were laid in 1882.

When the automobile arrived the demand for good roads again became pressing. One of the later good road enthusiasts was Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the United States shipping board during the war.

La Macadam Pavement.

"I recall our efforts to get good roads," Mr. Hurley reminisced the other day. "Robert R. McCormick and I were neighbors out near Wheaton, and we thought it would be a good idea if we could show our neighbors what could be done. So we had laid a macadam pavement on the o'd Batavia road, now Roosevelt road. The road started from the eastern boundary of Wheaton and went towards Glen Ellyn for a mile. This road was twenty feet wide.

"Our ex erimental road was put in about twenty-two years ago, and it was one of the first good roads in northern Illinois. Other roads of like material followed it."

And after the macadam road came the concrete thoroughfare. The first concrete was Church street, Evanston, which was completed Nov. 1, 1913. It was sixteen feet wide and 4,000 feet long. The cost was apportioned one-third each to Niles township, Cook county, and the chamber of commerce of Evanston.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Crevrolet's 1931 car, priced substantially below current levels was shown publicly in Detroit yesterday. The car is larger and is improved in appearance and performance. The new prices will bring the car to the lowest range at which a Chevrolet has ever sold. Announcement of the new car comes yearly two months earlier than usual.

Chevrolet advanced the announcement date to insure activity during two business months normally dull for the people dependent directly upon the company for a livlihood.

Edsal Ford has officially announced that there will be no changes in the present Model A Ford. He expressed a belief that 20,000,000 of the present models will have been produced before the motoring public will demand a change. The old Model T touched the 15,000,000 point before a start was made on the present Ford line.

Marmon will exhibit a new line of 16 cylinder cars at the January and February shows in New York, Chicago and Detroit. The new series is said to be radically different from any automobile now merchandised in so far as general appearance and design are concerned. Detailed announcement is expected shortly.

Buick produced and shipped 11,171 cars in October as compared with 13,303 cars in September and 20,596 in October last year. The November schedule calls for 7,061 cars.

"Today too many people are imagining, wrongly, that there is going to be some sort of complete change in methods of merchandising commodities. This is one of the principal things that is wrong with business today," William O'Neil, president of the General Tire and Rubber company of Akron, said in a talk at the National Tire Dealers' association convention at the Sherman hotel last week.

"Radical changes do not come suddenly in merchandising, although they often do evolve rapidly in production and in the invention and perfection of machinery," he said.

"One trouble with business today is that production men, having evolved new production methods successfully, have gone into the merchandising field and have attempted to bring about similar changes in a field in which they are not trained.

"This has resulted in the factory owned tire store and in chain stores and mail order merchandising. They do not seem to have learned that the most efficient worker is a piece worker, not a day worker. The independent tire dealer is a piece worker; the manager of a chain store, a mail order outlet, or a factory owned store is a day worker.

"You can get day workers to merchandise articles of small value very cheaply and they can do that work satisfactorily. However, when it comes to a matter of retailing an article that costs more than $5 you need a higher type of salesmanship."

October shipments of Reos totaled 2,265 passenger cars, a gain of 237 per cent over September shipments and 112 per cent over October 1929 when shipments totaled 1,116 cars.

Do Not Hurry in Putting a Patch on Inner Tube

If you are patching an inner tube you will get best results if you do not hurry the application of the patch. Apply the cement to both the patch and to the tube to be mended, and before applying the patch to the tube, let the cement become dry enough so that it is in the "tacky," or very sticky stage. The patch can then be applied and it will be found that it will adhere readily, with little chance of blowing off or leaking when the tube is inflated.

Work Progressing Rapidly on St. Joe-So. Haven Road

Work is proceeding satisfactorily on the relocation of United States highway 31, running between St. Joseph and Benton Harbor, Mich., and South Haven, Mich. The new road will follow the shore line of Lake Michigan more closely, being considerably to the west of the present highway. Two miles of the new road has been graded along the shore, four miles west of Coloma, and two bridges have been started across ravines at Camp Gray and Michigan Beach.

WHY IS IT MEN CANNOT TEACH WIVES TO DRIVE?

Just Try To and See What Happens.

BY VIRGINIA SCHMITZ.

Even a professor can't teach his wife how to drive, and the easiest way to convince a man he picked a brainless dumbbell for a wife, or a woman that she married a heartless brute, is to let her take driving lessons from her loving husband.

He can teach the other fellow's wife with ease and precision and she will find that lessons from his best friend go rapidly and brilliantly. But just let any man start explaining the intricacies of the gear shift to that lady who happens to be his wife and the battle of the ages is on.

O, You Fool!

"No, no, NO," rise the inflection of Mr. Husband as his sweet, shy wife steps on the gas instead of the brake. "You fool, O, you fool!" The emergency prevents a crash but not a crisis and the student is dissolved in tears. Or, worse still, she uses her husband's language right back at him.

"A man just forgets what patience means," said one wife just recovering from a sad instruction experience, "when he tries to teach his wife how to drive. He's so used to telling her what to do and expecting her to do it without a moment's hesitation that when she falters over some driving detail he forgot to explain his blood pressure rises.

Right back at her comes dear teacher with "Women just can't stand to have their husbands know more about anything than they do. You try to explain driving principles to them, but they know all about it. And then they start to drive and make a mess of it. Who wouldn't get mad."

She Learns to Drive.

She learned to drive all right, but it was from the next door neighbor's husband.

"Such a gentleman," she sighed, "so patient and understanding. Why, it was simplicity itself to learn from him."

But his wife also could tell another story.

For ten years one husband bravely attempted to teach his likewise courageous wife how to drive. The marriage survived, but the instruction course never attained success. Finally he bought a second hand car and the salesman taught her how to drive it in two lessons.

The problem of instruction has been solved to a great extent by the willing automobile salesman anyway. His temper is apt to be restrained by the prospect of a sale and, any way, it isn't his wife he's teaching.

Wants Car to Himself.

And having a second car has made it much easier for a man to teach his wife how to drive, most women say.

"Part of the trouble, as I've discovered it," said one, "is that a man doesn't want his wife to drive his car at all. Or anybody else, for that matter. It's his pride and his joy, and he hates to think of alien and feminine hands on the wheel. But a second car that he has no particular fondness for will change the whole situation. He can become even gentle as a teacher if he knows that his wife won't be fooling with his particular and pet car."

One husband that I found who taught his wife to drive the family car without the slightest flutter on the domestic horizon stands out as a bright and shining light. Perhaps it was because he was a lawyer and used to training dumb witnesses just how to act on the stand.

Learn on Honeymoon.

But, anyway, she learned without a quarrel and no mean words were exchanged in the process. To cap the climax, when she criticises her husband's method of dodging in and out of traffic on crowded highways, he has been known to turn the wheel over to her without a whimper.

Most married women, however, give this advice for every young girl to follow:

"Make him teach you on your honeymoon, or, better still, while you're engaged. Because when the honeymoon is over there's no learning from him."

Gasoline Comes Pretty High Outside the U. S.

American motorists pay as little as, or even less than, 17 or 18 cents a gallon for gasoline, while in Canada and Mexico the cost per gallon is from 23 to 35 cents. In Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, and other European nations motorists pay as much as 40 cents a gallon. In Bolivia they pay 65 cents, and the world average outside the United States is about 35 cents.

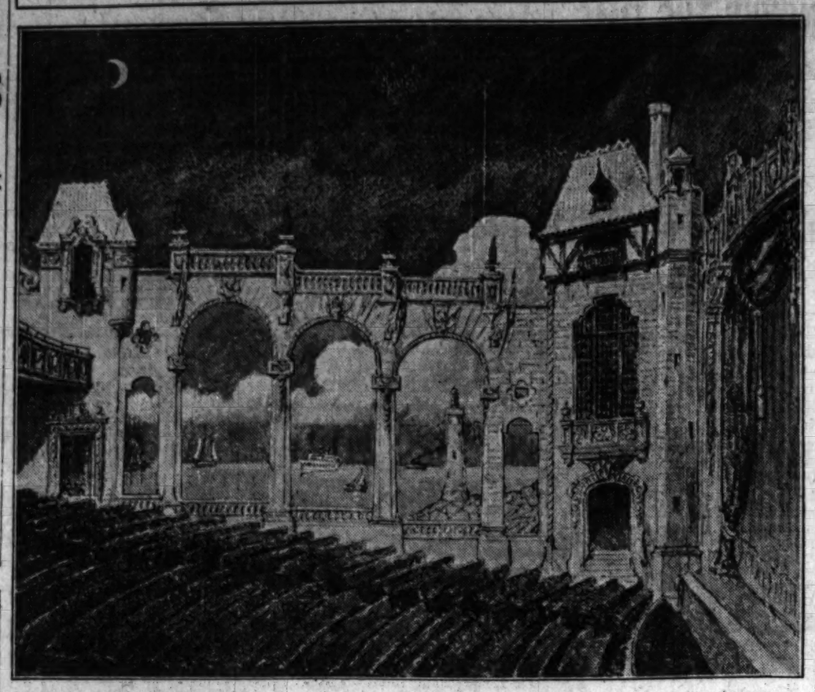
CHICAGO'S FIRST MARINE MOVIE



Above is an interior view of Chicago's newest talkie temple now under construction near Devon and Western by the Publix-Balaban & Katz interests. J. E. O. Pridmore of Chicago is architect. An exterior view was given in this section on Sunday, August 10, 1930. The auditorium will be of the atmospheric type, but instead of the conventional landscape treatment of side walls this new playhouse will have a seascape effect, so that the audience apparently are seated in full view of the ocean, with lighthouse effects and ships passing in the offing. It is claimed that this will be the first theater in America with a marine treatment. The combination of water, sky, and stars offers an unusual field for unique lighting effects. The theater will have 3,500 seats and will cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, it is stated. Paschen Bros. are the general contractors. Completion is scheduled for early next year.

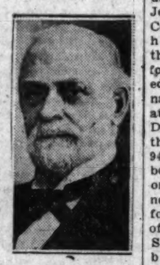
PLAN ANTIQUES EXHIBIT AT THE PALMER HOUSE

The original homestead papers covering the property where the Palmer house now stands will be one of the features of the Chicago Antiques exposition, to be held in the Palmer house Nov. 10 to 15. They are dated 1832 and hence nearly qualify as antiques themselves, being within two years of a century old. These homestead records will be exhibited by Margaret Chapman Little, antiques collector of Geneva, Ill.



POTTER PALMER.

"My grandfather, James Clayton Herrington, came to Chicago in 1930," said Mrs. Little. "He returned to his home in Pennsylvania, then came back to Chicago in 1832. He ran, with Dale & Newberry, the first store in Fort Dearborn. That year he filed a homestead claim on 160 acres of land that now comprises the Chicago loop district.

"Later a portion of this land became the property of his son, James Clayton Herrington Jr., whose wife, Charity, sold it to Potter Palmer shortly after the Chicago fire. The price was $300 a front foot. The third Palmer house, an eight story 'palace hotel,' was completed and opened on Nov. 8, 1873. This was the structure wrecked a few years ago to make way for the present modern Palmer house."

HOME BUILDING AND REMODELING

LINOLEUM EVERY DAY SHOWS ITS WORTH IN HOME

Each Year It Improves in Beauty, Durability.

[Next week will appear an article, "Weather Strips and Winter Windows for Your Home."

BY LOUISE BARGELT.
[Home Builders Editor.]

For years linoleum has proven itself a tried and true friend in many a kitchen and bath throughout the country. It is the oldest of the modern flooring materials and its first appearance in this country was in the early '70s.

In those days the colors and designs were limited to printing and did not lay claim to any such permanence as they now possess.

Since then amazing strides have been made in the manufacturing processes of this flooring until at the present time it offers itself as an effective, striking and vastly enduring medium in the floor treatment of any room in the house, the living room even not excepted.

Patterns have been designed which have never been seen before and which, in their wide variety, can be fitted in harmoniously with any decorating scheme.

Colors, moreover, have been achieved which softly supplement a brightly decorated room or add a vivid touch to a room with neutral tinted walls and dark furniture and draperies.

Increase in Durability.

Besides these long strides forward in beauty and color and pattern there has been much increase in the durability given to this material, so that now an excellent grade of inlaid linoleum, properly laid, may be expected to endure for a long number of years.

Naturally one must not expect this extreme longevity from the less expensive grade; from a felt base type, for instance, which is much less expensive and has only a thin coating of linoleum, with its design printed on, laid over the felt. Or from a printed linoleum where the colors are painted or printed on. These cheaper grades are serviceable and last a given length of time, according to the care and wear that is given them.

The higher grades of linoleum are inlaid, however, and here the coloring matter has become, by deft mixing, an integral part of the linoleum, which is, in turn, laid on a base of heavy burlap. It is when a good grade of this inlaid linoleum is correctly cemented to a good underflooring that it can be expected to stand up under practically a lifetime of service.

In choosing linoleum for a room it should be remembered that plain floor coverings add to its size.

Range of Coloring.

There is a wide range of colorings in the plain linoleums, including all the conventional dark and light shades and the more unusual shades—terra cotta, orange, cadet blue, maroon, egg plant and so on.

The plain linoleums are also manufactured to give a lovely textured appearance; a jaspé effect linoleum in which white is combined with the solid color, and the result, a somewhat softer effect than an absolutely solid color.

Marble and granite effects are very popular and these are obtained by a commingling of colors.

If one chooses one may select a marbled linoleum which resembles some old time courtyard floored with brick. Other patterns are suggestive, in their irregular mixing of pattern and color, of slate or even flagstone.

Particularly liked are the marble patterns in tile effect. Black and white, green and black, red and black—the combinations are numerous.

Marble Pattern for Hall.

A marble pattern is always appropriate in a hall, a spot no longer regarded as the stepchild in the house, wearing out many of the discarded "garments" from the other rooms.

No linoleum could scarcely be too gay for a sunroom nor too fanciful for a small child's room. And linoleums there are which are decorated with cut-outs of animals, nursery rhymes and so on—all for the youngster's playroom.

Incidentally, it might be said that linoleum is most appropriate for a child's room, as it can easily be kept spotless and immaculate. Furthermore, it is dense and pleasantly yielding under foot.

For the living room and dining room marbleized linoleums or jaspé linoleums are frequently seen. For the kitchen and bath tiled or geometric designs are excellent, in any color or combination of color the room decorations may carry out.

In choosing linoleums the room exposure should be considered, with cooler colors selected for the south and west rooms and warmer colors for the north and east.

Appearance, durability, comfort, quietness and sanitary features are all points to be kept in mind in the choosing of a flooring for one's home.

Pleasing Effect for Hall Floor

Most felicitous, indeed, are the new color combinations and patterns found in the inlaid linoleums of the present time. Pictured is a hall—a spot in the home where traffic is usually heavy—which has been given an enduring flooring of inlaid linoleum in black and white marble effect. On the walls are sea green paneling and scenic wall paper in harmonizing colors.

Great Strides Made in Linoleum Floor Covering

Really amazing strides have been made in recent years in linoleum floor coverings and we see them manufactured for every room in the house as well as in a new and lovely variety of patterns and colorings.

FARM and GARDEN

BY PAUL POTTER

EARLY DAYS OF FARM SHOWDOM COME TO LIGHT

Nestled securely in the hearts of agricultural peoples on both hemispheres is a classic display of animal perfection that has for thirty years made Chicago the agricultural capital of the world.

Royalty and prairie herdsman gather about its tan bark ring in keen rivalry and admiration. City folk in tuxedos and spats rub elbows with swarthy skinned ruralists of a dozen nations. For one week, just after Thanksgiving, the International Live Stock exposition has been the mecca of thousands, as it will again beginning the last Saturday in this month.

"Barnum" Modestly Rules Show.

Behind the scenes, back where the tented throngs never get a glimpse of him, sits the "Barnum of Agricultural Showdom." Modest in achievements, rich in friendships and experiences, unruffled by exacting details such a manager cannot escape, polite as any royal statesman to prince or pauper, "Barney" Heide has had a hand in every International.

He has watched it grow from infancy, has nursed it through wartime and national plague vicissitudes. He is as eager to further its interests and to bring new achievements to Chicago's stock yards today as when a youngster taking care of a few details under the first manager, William E. Skinner.

Prince, President Comment.

And Barney could fill several books with fascinating reading, were he to disclose the intimacies of his showday life. Of course, you could recall with him the visits of notables to Chicago's show. Coolidge as president. Lowden as presidential timber. Every secretary of agriculture since Tama Jim Wilson, many with other cabinet officers. Prince Albert de Linne of Belgium. Famous actors and actresses, millionaires and nobility from Wall street, London, Paris, Brussels, and Berlin. They have all been welcomed by the International's quiet "secretary of state."

The prince of Wales writes him he must see an International soon, before he can consider his wordly travels complete. Herbert Hoover writes him that this exposition's material worth to agricultural and international progress cannot be measured.

Such is but a fraction of the force behind the International. Historically, its founding can still be measured within a generation, while A. G. Leonard, president of the Union Stock Yards and Transit company, still knows who foots any deficits, who created the first show, and who is really entitled to the lion's share of credit for making Chicago the meat animal industry mecca of the world.

Chicago's first live stock show was held on the old lake front. It was given financial aid from the state, just as might well be the case today if such were necessary. Known as the American fat stock show, its life was brilliant for that period as it was brief. Having been "ejected" as W. R. Goodwin Jr. once expressed it, the fat stock show created a desire for the International that followed as an independent development.

The first International was planned for 1899, but preparations tied it up until the following year. In a few weeks, millions will see and hear of a gigantic spectacle marking the 31st anniversary, entirely undreamed of by the breeders and business men who opened the new era in this manner.

Memories Replace Early Breeds.

In those early days, breeds were popular that have since become memories in American agriculture. Note these: Galloway, Polled Durham, Devon and Sussex fat cattle; Leicester sheep; Victoria, Essex, Cheshire, and Small Yorkshire swine. Beasties in those days scraped the straw with their bellies, had small noses, short legs, deep chests hanging like turkey wattles under their chins, and attained fatness after years of feeding and grooming.

The complete change in types of animals for meat production that has taken place in these three decades is monumental to the pace set by the International in interpreting modern achievements in breeding as well as showing prowess.

In a later story, we will bring back fond memories to many, and new bits out of the past for others, as Mr. Heide has seen them in his thirty years of agricultural showdom.

WHEAT PRICES WEAKEN, DUE TO STOCK SELLING

Traders Uneasy Over Argentine Crop.

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Wheat traders perhaps would like to take the bull side of the market, but weakness in securities in Wall street led to sufficient local pressure yesterday to carry prices off 1⅝@1⅞c after a fractional advance at the opening. The finish was at net losses of ⅜@1c, with old December 73½c; March, 77⅛c; May, 79⅝@79¾c, and July, 80⅛@80⅝c.

Uneasiness over the outcome of the new Argentine wheat crop prevails in all of the leading world's markets. Liverpool closed ¼@½d lower, failing to fully reflect the sharp dip which occurred in North America after the English market closed on Friday. Winnipeg was off ½@⅝c for the day, while Buenos Aires was unchanged to ⅛c lower, the former on February, which closed at 69⅝c.

Claim Rust Damage.

A rather strange condition seems to have developed regarding the Argentine wheat crop reports, as so far no private claims of damage have been received, which is out of the ordinary, while official Argentine reports indicate that a downward revision in estimates as to the yield will be necessary. A Buenos Aires cable to Clement, Curtis & Co. said: "Rust infection found in the whole of Buenos Aires province. The forecast is for general rains. Cutting is expected to commence in Entre Rios province in ten days. Prospects are poor in that section."

Previous reports of rust damage were confined to the provinces of Cordoba and Santa Fe, in the northern part of the wheat belt, while Buenos Aires province is in the southern section.

As long as there is a probability of heavy damage to the new Argentine wheat crop, and reports indicate that there is, an unsettled market is generally expected, as foreigners have been anticipating heavy offerings from that country at low prices. Despite the record acreage, estimates on the Argentine crop so far this season have indicated only an average yield per acre and a total return of not over 275,000,000 bu, the figures being made before the rust reports started to come forward. Last year's crop was 148,000,000 bu.

Argentine wheat c. i. f. United Kingdom ports was quoted Saturday at equal to 82c per bu, which compared with 81c for American hard winter and 78c for Russian grain. While there were intimations of bids in the market for Manitoba wheats during the day no sales of consequence were reported. Winnipeg grain exchange will be closed Monday, the Canadian Thanksgiving day, but it will be open Tuesday, when American markets are closed for Armistice day.

Corn Eases with Wheat.

Trade in corn was not large, and while country offerings to arrive remain small in the face of favorable weather for securing the crop, local operators showed less disposition to take the buying side and prices eased in sympathy with the reaction in wheat and on the weakness in the stock market and the finish was ⅝@¾c lower, with old December closing at 72⅜@72¾c; March, 76¼c; May, 77¼@78¼c, and July, 78⅝c.

There was some evening up during the day for the government crop report, which will be given to the trade Monday at 2 p. m., Chicago time. The general expectation of the trade is that it will show a corn crop of around 2,047,000,000 bu, or the same as the October figures. Buenos Aires closed ¼@½c lower. Since April 1 Argentina has shipped 3,347,000 bu corn to Canada and 1,021,000 bu to the United States, but in the last few days western Nebraska has made sales of corn to the American Pacific coast, which has heretofore been securing its supplies from the southern hemisphere and from Manchuria.

Bulk of the trade in oats was in changing between the various deliveries, with December bought and new May sold at 3½c difference.

Imports as Vital to U.S. as Exports

BY SCRUTATOR.

None of the world's countries could exist even comfortably on the things it produces within its own borders. There is so much talk nowadays about dumping and anti-dumping laws, about the necessity of disposing of surpluses abroad and taking nothing in return, that it may be wondered whether too many obstacles are being placed in the way of foreign trade.

The efficacy of tariffs in this country, when they protect industries which logically belong here, has been demonstrated for so long a time that it must be accepted as certain. But for the United States to levy a tax of six million dollars on imported olive oil, when the country produces only 2 per cent of its own supply, or to tax sugar from Cuba for the benefit of a small minority has elements of the foolish.

A classic example of tariff tinkering was the suggestion, seriously made, that there should be an import tax on bananas because that would compel the people of the United States to quit eating them and instead increase their consumption of apples and peaches.

Must Buy Abroad.

Imports are as necessary as exports. Russia and the United States are the most self-sufficient of nations in natural resources, yet both have such important deficiencies in these that a stoppage of imports would disrupt business so severely that decades might pass before a complete recovery could be made.

The American steel industry in its processes must have forty different commodities from fifty-seven foreign countries. For many of them, including tin, antimony, chromite, vanadium, and nickel, there are either negligible domestic sources or none at all. Of manganese this country produces only about 60,000 tons a year, and the American consumption, 600,000 tons larger, comes from Brazil, Africa, and India.

No nickel or tin is produced in this country, although our metal workers consume in their manufacturing more of these metals than those of any other nation. We produce no raw silk, yet 127,000 workers are employed in handling and processing that which comes in from the orient and from Italy. Wool, jute, and leather, together with the tropical fruits, coffee, sugar cane and cocoa, must be imported to make life livable, according to the American standard. The list could be carried on almost indefinitely.

Low Price Not a Gain.

Extremely low prices for imports are not particularly advantageous to the United States. While the materials cost little the people who produced them are deprived of an opportunity to purchase American goods in the usual volume. It is coming to be realized that this country is furnishing by purchases abroad the gold with which foreigners buy here. The excess of American exports over imports is in general only about enough to cover the annual difference in invisibles like tourist expenditures, remittances, and investments.

In view of the supposedly imminent resurrection of the export debenture schemes it might be well to point out that efforts to sell more abroad should be tied to plans to buy more abroad. The lead has to be taken in such matters by the more powerful and furthest advanced nations.

The tin miner of the Malay states is of as much importance to American industry as the soviet Russian buying our tractors. We may sometime see conscious efforts being made to raise the economic standards of even the teeming millions of China by buying from them in order that they in turn may be customers.

BURLINGTON TO SPEED UP TRAINS TO TWIN CITIES

Under the new schedule which reduces the running time of trains to the Pacific northwest the Burlington road will speed up its trains between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul. Under the new plan two trains will make the Chicago-Twin City run in 15 minutes less time and a third train will cut 25 minutes from its running time.

Three hours and fifteen minutes will be cut from the eastbound schedule of the Chicago and North Western-Union Pacific train between Chicago and the Pacific northwest, and one hour and fifteen minutes sliced from the westbound schedule, effective today.

LOOKING AHEAD WITH BUSINESS

Business has picked up appreciably among manufacturers and wholesalers of the Chicago region since Sept. 1, but Christmas buying will be more conservative than last year, a survey by the Chicago Association of Credit Men reveals. An average increase of 18 per cent in business was reported by the manufacturers and wholesalers. 15 per cent of them indicating an appreciable speeding up of work. Ninety-five per cent of those reporting said retailers were carrying light inventories. They said, however, that orders for Christmas business are not up to the orders placed in 1928 and 1929 and opinion was divided as to whether retailers would be understocked at Christmas.

To assist in relieving the unemployment situation in Canada, the Canadian National railways have undertaken to proceed during the fall and winter months with a large program of work which ordinarily would be done during the summer. This program, combined with the new $50,000,000 terminal facilities development at Montreal, will provide work for about 1,500 men, it is estimated.

The Michigan Steel corporation has completed its program of plant expansion and rearrangement at its mill in Ecorse, Mich., and with new units in operation the company has increased productive capacity more than fifty per cent.

Dow, Jones & Co. reports a preliminary estimate indicates October gross of the Burlington railroad will be approximately $13,197,000, against actual gross in October last year of $16,165,719, a decrease of slightly more than 18 per cent, but a gain of about 2 per cent over gross of $12,847,811 in September this year.

The Willys-Overland company has called back several groups of workers and now has 6,000 men at work on the new models.

Trade revival in the southwest in spite of low prices for cotton and wheat is seen in the shipment of a trainload of Oliver Hart-Parr tractors which started from the factory at Charles City to arrive in Dallas, Tex., early next week.

The Foreman-State corporation, the investment affiliate of the Foreman-State bank, will open an office in San Francisco on Nov. 12, it is announced by Gerhard Foreman, president. The opening of this office in charge of John W. Ogden, vice president, marks the corporation's second expansion in the last year, a New York office having been opened in January.

American Chicle yesterday declared the usual extra dividend of 25c and regular quarterly dividend of 50c on the common.

BEATRICE SALES GAIN IN FACE OF DULL BUSINESS

Creamery Company Grows in 1930.

BY HOWARD CARSWELL.

In the face of conditions unsatisfactory for business generally, the Beatrice Creamery company continues this year to show rapid growth both in its scope of operations and earning power. Sales volume for the current year should amount to $100,000,000, according to President C. H. Haskell, despite the summer's drought and lower prices on all important commodities.

Sales for the fiscal half year ended Aug. 31 gained 33 per cent and the net 63 per cent over the comparable 1929 period, the figures being:

	1930.	1929.
Sales	$40,517,311	$30,390,245
Net	2,166,308	1,328,188

The net was equivalent to $6.29 a share on 298,868 shares of common stock outstanding after preferred dividends, against $5.48 in 1929 on 195,864 shares then outstanding.

From a small butter and egg business in Beatrice, Neb., the company has steadily expanded, pyramiding its business by about a hundred acquisitions, with operations ranging from the Rockies to the Atlantic coast, excepting the southern states.

Founded in 1891.

The creamery business was in its infancy in 1891, when George E. Haskell formed the partnership of Haskell & Bosworth. Then butter was selling for 8 to 10 cents a pound, while eggs brought the Nebraska farmer 6 to 8 cents a dozen. Times were hard and money scarce. Cream checks were a godsend to the farmer, they being the equivalent of spot cash.

Three years later the little business churned its first butter. Ensuing years brought the widespread use of the hand separator for skimming the farmers' milk, improved cold storage and refrigeration methods, the pasteurization process. Subsequent years brought the great popularity of ice cream and the rising trend of per capita consumption of dairy products.

In 1897 a Nebraska corporation was formed with capital of $100,000. A plant was built in Lincoln. The corporation's first acquisition, the Continental Creamery company of Topeka, Kas., greatly increased its business and gave it an established trade brand of butter. Another creamery in St. Louis followed, and later one in Denver joined the fold. The firm was reincorporated in Iowa in 1905 for $3,000,000.

Enters Chicago Field.

The Chicago component of the Beatrice Creamery company was the old Pioneer Creamery, which followed the Holland Butter company, founded in 1869. The company's first invasion of Chicago came in 1910, when it rented a Michigan avenue house. The executive offices came to this city in 1913.

Beatrice was the first dairy organization to prepare butter in packaged cartons, and in 1916 it launched its first national advertising campaign on its butter under an established brand.

The following table is indicative of the company's past record for the fiscal years ending Feb. 28 back to and including 1926:

	Sales.	Net inc.	Earnings per com. share.
1930	$83,861,636	$2,483,353	$7.43
1929	53,307,111	1,823,013	6.31
1928	52,744,029	1,522,630	6.56
1927	23,674,343	1,005,535	5.97
1926	35,050,915	1,002,534	6.15
1914	.....	643,621	....
1911	.....	627,198	....

Upon the death of George E. Haskell about ten years ago, W. H. Ferguson, a vice president for many years, succeeded to the presidency. He became chairman of the board two years ago when C. H. Haskell, nephew of George E. Haskell, became president. The company now serves about 120 communities with milk, ice cream, butter, produce, etc. Its ice cream business has made rapid strides in recent years and increased 55 per cent in the last fiscal year, while milk sales jumped 74 per cent over the preceding year.

Huge Raw Material Purchase.

More than $50,000,000 is paid by the company each year for raw materials. In the last fiscal year it handled 4,800 carloads of eggs and 300 carloads of dressed poultry.

About 25 per cent of the company's net earnings are derived from ice cream, a second 25 per cent from butter, another one-fourth from milk, and the rest from eggs, cheese, poultry, etc.

Last Aug. 8 stockholders approved an increase in preferred stock from 80,000 shares of $100 par to 125,000 and the common stock from 500,000 shares of $50 par to 750,000. The stock is currently quoted on the New York exchange at around 72 and the preferred at 107.

HOUDAILLE CORP. GETS MUSKEGON MOTOR COMPANY

Form Merger Through Exchange of Stock.

BY THOMAS FURLONG.

Conclusion of negotiations for the acquisition of the Muskegon Motor Specialties company by the Houdaille-Hershey corporation was announced yesterday by Claire L. Barnes, president of the latter company. The deal will be carried on by an exchange of stocks of the two firms, both of which are traded in on the Chicago exhange.

CLAIRE L. BARNES.

The two companies are important units in the automobile accessory field and the combined properties have a market value in excess of $3,000,000.

The merger involves no public financing, as it is being carried out solely through an exchange of securities. Under the proposed terms Muskegon Motor Specialties common stock holders will receive one share of Houdaille class A stock after provision for the expense in completing the exchange. Muskegon Motor common and Houdaille common each closed yesterday at $5 a share on the Chicago exchange.

Terms Not Revealed.

When the exchange of the junior securities is declared operative it is planned to make an offer to the class A holders of Muskegon Motor. The terms of this offer were not hinted at in the announcement. Muskegon A is currently selling slightly below Houdaille A. The last sale in Muskegon A was made yesterday at 10⅝ and Houdaille A closed 13½.

The Muskegon company has specialized in the manufacture of camshafts since its organization in 1909. In 1928 it acquired the L. O. Gordon Manufacturing company and early this year purchased a majority of the capital stock of the Jackson Motor Shaft company.

The Houdaille company makes shock absorbers, automobile bumpers, ignition locks, tire covers, and other motor accessories. It operates plants in Chicago and North Chicago, Decatur, Buffalo, Detroit, and Oshawa, Canada.

Bendix Aviation company, one of the leaders in the motor accessory field, yesterday issued its earnings report for the third quarter. Like the statements of the other automobile and specialties companies the report reflects the conditions which have prevailed in the industry this year.

Net Is $136,397.

The report disclosed net profit for the three months period ended Sept. 30 of $136,397 after charges and taxes. This compares with $779,251 in the preceding quarter and $1,727,033 in the third quarter of 1929. Third quarter profit is equivalent to about 6 cents a share on 2,097,644 shares outstanding, against 37 cents on 2,097,454 shares in the June quarter and 81 cents on 2,115,000 shares in the September quarter last year.

Nine months' net earnings totaled $1,667,332, equivalent to 80 cents a share, as compared with $3.26 a share on 2,115,000 shares in the corresponding months of 1929.

Trading here yesterday did not feature the shares of the motor group. Interest was centered in the utilities, with Cities Service receiving most of the attention. The stock was again the target of a determined attack and broke over four points under the barrage of selling.

A NEW IDEA IN LIFE INSURANCE

That May Double or Triple Your Returns

A new plan of Life Insurance has just been put out by the Bankers Life Company of Iowa that's proving very popular with the "Man of Family."

The new "Family Protection Policy" is designed to furnish a substantial income until all the children are grown, then a substantial amount to the wife.

Each $10,000 policy pays for death within the first 20 years $1,000 in cash at death plus a guaranteed income of 12% on each $10,000 unit, payable $100 a month for every month that the insured fails to live out 240 months (20 years) from the date of issuance of the policy.

Should death occur at the end of the first year the guaranteed monthly payments are $12,800, plus a payment of $10,000 to the wife at the end of 20 years, total guaranteed payments of $22,800, plus possible dividends during income period $4,745, making grand total of $39,545.

Should insured live out the 20 years, a substantial cash or paid-up insurance settlement can be had, or $10,000 insurance can be continued at a reduced rate for the benefit of the wife or the insured's old age, when a substantial cash payment or a monthly life income can be taken.

And the most surprising part is that this wonderful policy can be had at a rate but a little more than that required for $10,000 on the regular Ordinary Life plan.

Hear Report Advises Cut in Oil Activities

A report of the federal oil conservation board's committee on petroleum economics, suggesting a reduction in field and refinery production activities of the petroleum industry, was before the American Petroleum institute as it prepared to open its eleventh annual meeting in the Stevens hotel here tomorrow.

The report covers a survey of the economic situation in the industry from Oct. 1, 1930, to April 1, 1931, made at the request of the institute's board of directors and is regarded as an impartial check on a similar survey being made by an institute committee on the economic situation. This committee, of which J. Edgar Pew, Sun Oil company, Philadelphia, is chairman, probably will present its report tomorrow also.

With two reports on hand, it is expected that the work of the industry in solving current problems, chief among which is overproduction accentuated by a decline in consumption of and demand for petroleum products occasioned by the business depression, greatly will be facilitated.

The committee, estimating necessary gasoline inventories for next spring at 45,000,000 barrels, said the situation thus requires a curtailment of 7 per cent in the gasoline supply from the estimated October rate. Should demand show a decline of 4 per cent, a curtailment of 10 per cent would be required, the committee added.

The report added that the oil run to stills also would range from 2,220,000 barrels per day to 2,410,000 barrels per day, with a medium of 2,310,000 barrels per day if there is neither increase nor decrease in demand.

RADIO CORP. HAS THIRD QUARTER NET OF $365,654

Net earnings of the Radio Corporation of America reported were $365,654 in the third quarter of 1930, against $3,729,389 in the same period of 1929.

Net income for the first nine months of 1930 totaled $870,753, while preferred dividend requirements were $3,900,000, leaving a deficit of $3,029,667. This compares with a net income of $13,725,876 in the same period of 1929.

Gross income during the September quarter totaled $32,418,177, against $63,272,925 in the same period in 1929 and for the first nine months of 1930 gross was $85,150,256, against $123,712,518 in the first nine months of 1929.

Profit and loss surplus of the company as of Sept. 30 last was $26,660,597, against $29,690,244 on Dec. 31, 1929.

FORD PARTS ARE SHIPPED FROM DETROIT BY LAKE

Inauguration of a lake steamship service between the Detroit and Chicago plants of the Ford Motor company was accomplished Friday with the arrival here of the barke Lake Inaha from the motor capital carrying a cargo of automobile parts valued at $1,500,000.

The barge put in at the Ford company dock on the Calumet river at 126th street. This dock was recently completed at a cost of $250,000. The Lake Inaha, which is 313 feet long, left Detroit Sunday morning. A heavy storm on Lake Michigan compelled it to put in at Milwaukee, delaying arrival here.

The Ford company has eleven barges in operation on the lakes. Service between Chicago and Detroit will be restricted to the navigation reason.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Nov. 8.—The stock market, groggy from its terrific beatings of yesterday and the day before, reeled on into still lower territory today.

All the pivotals were under fresh pressure, United States Steel crashing through its new "resistance level" of 140, New York Central taking another dizzy nose dive of 4¼ points, and General Electric, Consolidated Gas, Radio, Standard of New Jersey and most of the others falling to new lows for the year, two years or even longer.

Something that passed for a rally developed in the last half hour of trading and managed to restore a measure of the early losses, but it was a puny affair at best and had little effect on the drooping spirits of the speculative community. The situation has obviously gotten beyond the "best minds" of the street and experts have about quit guessing on future trends until something more tangible on which to stake their prognostications bobs up.

None of them have been able to quite make out what the present selling is all about, seeing no more real cause for alarm than existed last week or the week before or ever since the business depression reached such serious stages.

Attitude on Joint Statement.

There was some disposition in influential quarters today to take comfort from the joint statement of the big Democratic bosses promising to pull together for prosperity and not play politics with things in such a squeamish state, but nobody seemed to have permitted his confidence to lead him into anything rash or extensive in the matter of stock buying.

The copper stocks made a brave effort to provide a peg for the hopes of those looking for signs of improvement, but their early shows of strength petered out before the finish and the best Anaconda, recognized leader of

AMERICANS EYE BRITISH PLANS ON DEBT FUNDING

Foreign Holders of War Loans Seek Advice.

BY SIDNEY CAVE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Nov. 8.—Many million dollars' worth of British government 5 per cent war loan bonds are held in America. One of the chief attractions to American investors undoubtedly is the fact that the stocks are tax free to residents abroad.

Events here are gradually favoring the plan of Philip Snowden, chancellor of the exchequer, to carry through his conversion loan offer for the five per cent war loan soon. Financial experts are increasingly confident that other British government issues, such as the four per cent funding loan, now around 94, will yet attain something like par, and the conversion loan of three and a half per cent will reach a yield basis of four per cent, bringing the price up to around 87.

On this reasoning there is considerable unanimity regarding the advice now current that American and foreign holders of the five per cent war loan should, if immediate capital appreciations are desired, exchange from the five per cent war loan into one of the long dated loans such as the funding fours, the conversion three and a halfs, or conversion four and a halfs.

Reasoning of Experts.

The expert reasoning is this: The present quotation—about 102¼—of the five per cent war loan is being held down by the threat of redemption. If the five per cents were quoted at the same yield basis as the funding loan—four and one-quarter per cent, instead of four and seven-eighths, the quotation would be about 118. To carry through successfully a conversion scheme of any magnitude on terms which would benefit the chancellor of the exchequer, British government credit on long dated securities, which is at present under four and a half per cent, must, it is calculated, be raised to a four per cent basis. In this event the equivalent price of the existing stocks would be considerably higher.

The funding fours, for instance, should gain six points and the conversion three and a halfs should gain six and a half points over the present price. The advantage of the exchange from the five per cent war loan from the viewpoint of capital appreciation thus appears well grounded. The argument therefore is that American holders or residents abroad holding five per cent war loan bonds, wishing to avoid the risk of being repaid at par, should exchange into four per cent funding loan, which also has the advantage of being tax free to residents abroad.

Demand from Americans.

This advice, THE TRIBUNE understands, is at present being given to foreign holders of war loan fives by responsible city houses who have recently received inquiries as to the best course to adopt.

Some American buyers have already added to the demand for other stocks which has assisted this week in a strong upward trend.

The current French banking troubles are now reacting in London, resulting in further large withdrawals of gold. The market is talking of at least $15,000,000 worth of gold being taken from the Bank of England for Paris and of adverse movements in leading foreign exchanges. All this creates fears of further substantial gold withdrawals, the present course of events putting in the background any question of an immediate reduction in the bank rate.

CRISIS IN PARIS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The world-wide business speculation crisis broke in France in a sensational way for the first time this week, when one of the most important brokerage and banking houses operating on the Paris curb closed its doors on Thursday despite strenuous efforts to find the capital necessary to pay its enormous differences.

This came directly on top of the suspension of payments by the Banque of Adam, which had been solid for more than a century, and the retirement from the curb market of five other leading banking houses. Consequently funds have been drawn from other banks in large proportions by the panic-stricken public, which lacks confidence.

The situation is considered extremely serious by the government, which is trying to carry out an energetic plan to save the position, realizing—although it is theoretically possible—that it is impossible to abandon the market to itself and allow the bubble to burst under present conditions. Premier Tardieu, the minister of finance, and several other leaders of the French banking and financial circles, held an important conference on Thursday to consider means of preventing the further spread of the crash.

SAY SECURITY UPTURN AWAITS BETTER BUSINESS

Stern & Co. Make Review of Market Situation.

That any definite improvement in the securities markets will have to await an upward turn in general business conditions, is the conclusion reached in the monthly investment review of Lawrence Stern & Co., investment bankers of Chicago and New York.

"Previous to October," stated the review, "the majority of the country's bond dealers looked forward to a strong bond market during the autumn months. These expectations proved disappointing, and declines in both the stock and bond markets during the past month have apparently resulted in a greater degree of pessimism among investment dealers than has been evidenced during the course of the present depression."

There is one bright spot in the securities field today, according to the review. This is the remarkable public demand for fixed trust securities, which have enjoyed an excellent business in the face of declining prices for their underlying shares.

October Offerings.

"The offering of two or three unusually large issues during October," said the review, "brings the volume of the month's offerings of new securities to a total slightly larger than that of September. The combined offerings of the month—including both stocks and bonds—total $500,903,497, compared to $464,983,259 in September.

"The increase in bond offerings was principally in the foreign municipal and industrial classifications—public utilities having registered a sharp decline.

"The outstanding features among the month's offerings were the $100,000,000 Dominion of Canada 4s and the $50,000,000 New York City 4s, which resulted in a sizable increase in the foreign and municipal classifications. Except for these two issues, the month's total would have registered a substantial decline. There was an entire absence of railroad issues for the first time since August, 1928; and the only issues appearing in the foreign column represent Canadian financing.

"In the stock field, the only classification in which there was a substantial volume was that of industrials, which registered a considerable increase over September. Although no definite figures on the volume of fixed trust securities are obtainable, it appears certain that such figures would considerably augment the October total, as this type continues to enjoy a high degree of popularity.

Leads Other Sections.

"New York City led the other sections of the country by a larger margin than usually is the October offerings with a total [excluding tax exempts] of more than $185,000,000 in stocks and bonds. Chicago was displaced for second honors by Boston—the latter city having responsible for $50,000,000. Following Chicago in third place, were Philadelphia and Montreal, in the order named.

"Reports from leading financial institutions in the twelve federal reserve districts as to conditions in the securities markets were summarized in the review as follows: Sixty-seven per cent of the nation's bond dealers report retail distribution of bonds below normal, the remainder reporting normal distribution—with no reports this month of demand above normal.

"The following compilation by Lawrence Stern & Co. shows bond and stock financing in September, by classification:

CASH·GRAIN NEWS

Foreign demand for North American grain was slow, as it usually is on a Saturday. With Winnipeg closed on Monday and American grain markets closed on Tuesday, it is generally expected that foreigners will be slow in taking hold for several days unless alarming reports are received from Argentina over the week-end.

Local handlers sold 135,000 bu wheat, 55,000 bu corn, 25,000 bu oats, 2,000 bu rye, and 5,000 bu barley to the domestic trade, with purchase of 5,000 bu corn to arrive.

The marked improvement in the outside milling demand for cash wheat here, with red winter, hard winter, and springs taken, failed to have any effect on the basis in the sample market which was unchanged. No. 1 red was nominally 6@6¼c over, No. 2 red 5@5¼c over, No. 1 hard 1¼@1¾c over, No. 2 hard ½@1c over, No. 1 northern 1@1½c over, and No. 2 northern December price to 1c under.

Official receipts of grain at Chicago on Saturday: Wheat, 19 cars; corn, 142 cars; oats, 50 cars; rye, 1 car; barley, 7 cars.

WORLD'S·GRAIN MARKET·NEWS

Argentine news on the wheat crop is becoming more bullish and attracting increased attention, with buying confined largely to breaks, while every bulge brings out selling and a reaction. This feature of price movement has become so general that traders who are friendly to the buying side are becoming discouraged and look for a trading market until news from the Argentine becomes more bullish, and the stock market shows stability.

Corn traders complain about the indifference on the part of the outsiders to take the buying side. There is a strong bullish element who support the market on breaks while a good percentage of pit operators lean to the selling side on bulges, creating a nervous market with operators on both sides not making any pronounced headway.

Broomhall says that old and new wheat in Argentina is now selling at approximately the same price, both on the futures market and for shipment. Shippers are quoting it 82c per bu, cif, which compared with Russian wheat afloat at 76c. American wheat is offered at 84c. Experts from Argentina, he says, have determined that there is stripe rust which attacks leaves primarily and later the berry, which becomes shriveled. Early investigations show that a loss of 20 per cent has occurred so far, but this is liable to increase unless weather turns cool and fair.

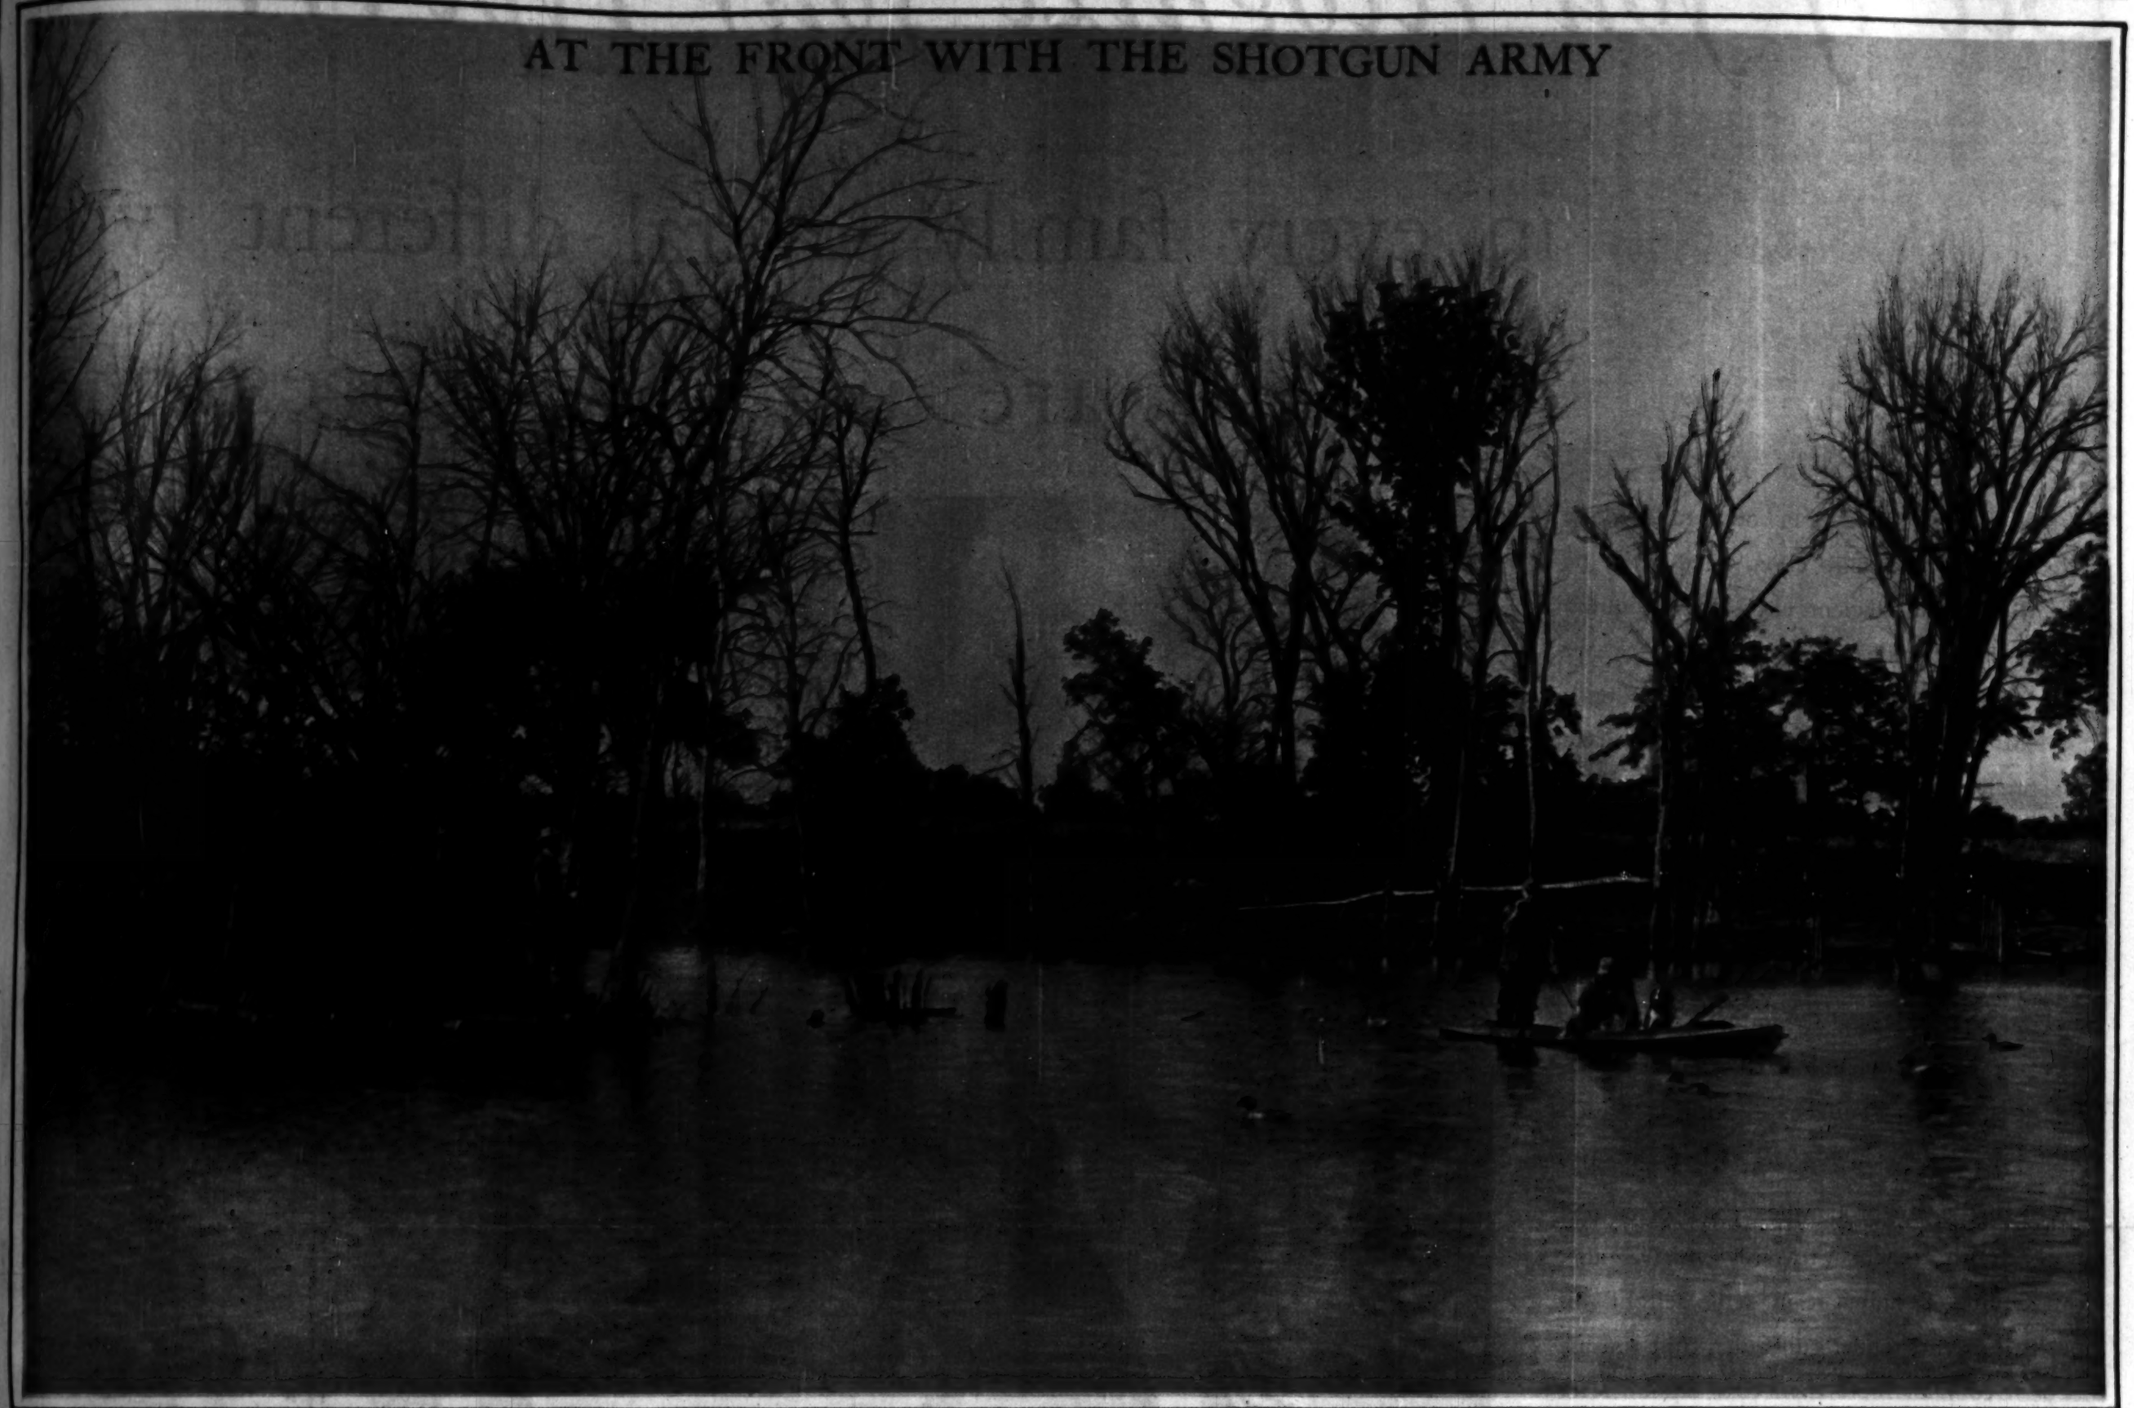
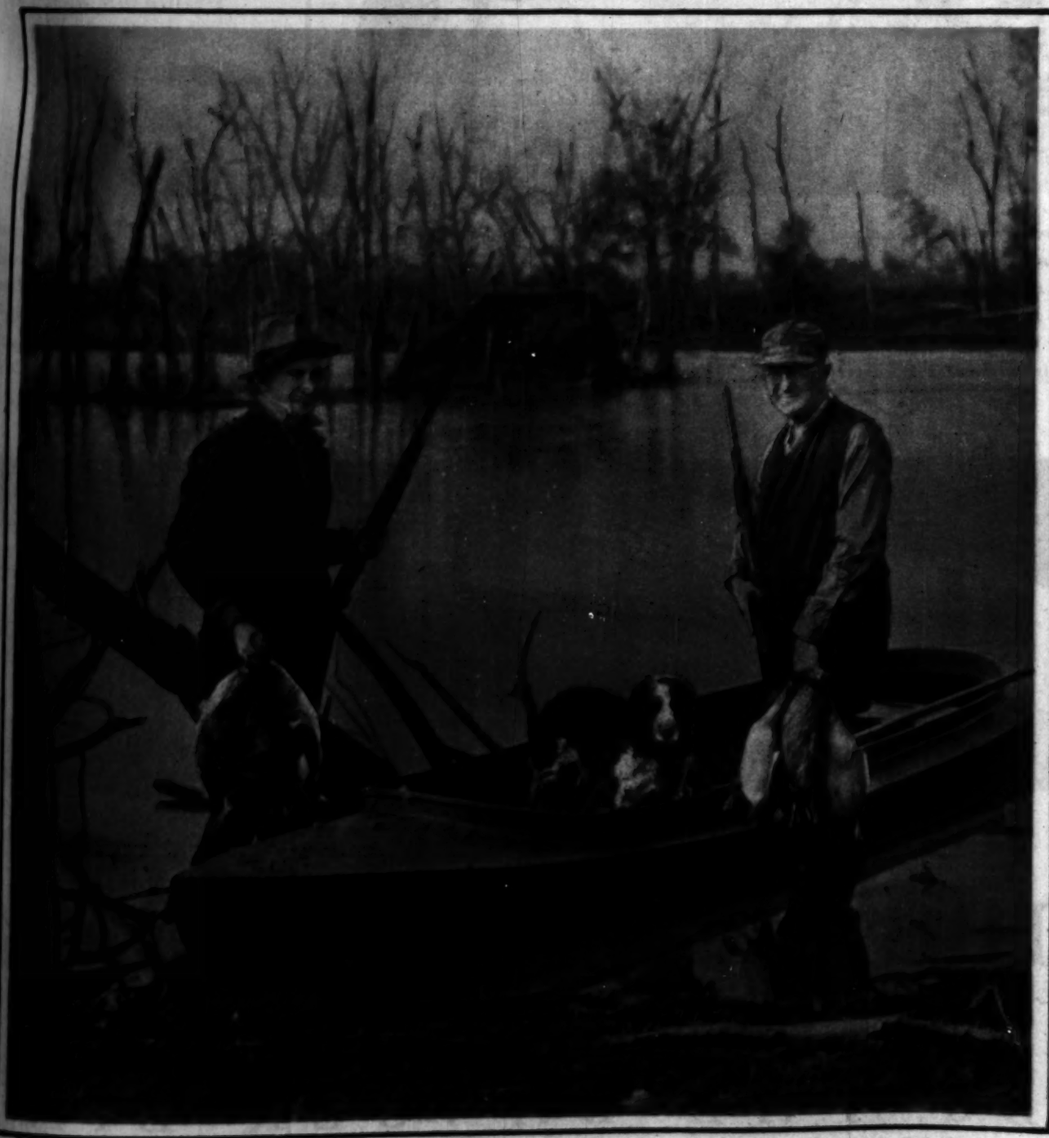
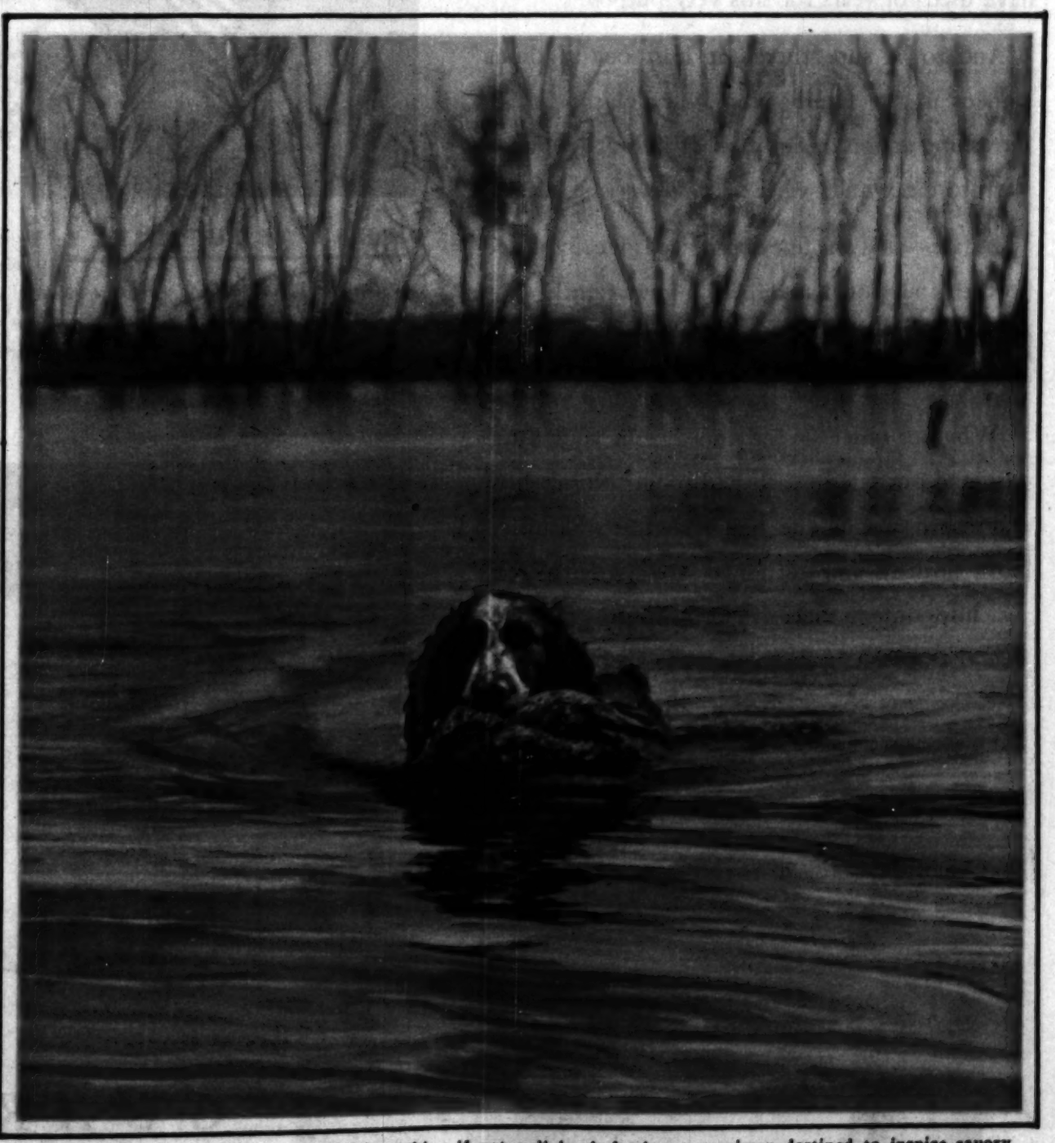
AT THE FRONT WITH THE SHOTGUN ARMY



HARVEST OF THE BIRDS—In red and gold lowlands Chicagoland sportsmen gratify that same eternal urge that dispatched the caveman upon the trail of whatever cavemen stalked; thousands strong, from bush and blind, they celebrate the fall by blazing away at the migratory flocks that honk and wheel and settle to the lure of the decoys. At Cuba island hunting lodge, along the Sangamon river, the photographer bagged these symbolic scenes of the season. At the right in the boat Bob Becker, Tribune writer on hunting and fishing, sets out decoys; that preliminary over, three hunters will settle in the blind for a spell of watchful waiting.



VETERANS AT THE GAME, THESE THREE—Two sportsmen, father and son, with Jack, Bob Becker's springer spaniel, and trophies of the day which compensate the hunter for numb toes and weary bones.



SERIOUS BUSINESS—Jack, who is nothing if not well bred, fetches a specimen destined to inspire savory odors from the kitchen range. There'll be tasty morsels to reward a good dog for duty well done; perhaps Jack knows?

See if you recognize your type . . .

in every family several different types of teeth are usually represented

PERHAPS there's one person in your family whose teeth seem a bit hard to clean. Then surely he needs the gentle, efficient cleansing of Squibb Dental Cream. Squibb's is a most effective cleaner because it is an alkaline dentifrice—made with Squibb Milk of Magnesia. It restores and preserves the natural luster of teeth—brilliantly and safely.

And there may be somebody at your house—aged a few bright years—who is just beginning to brush his tiny teeth. Certainly he should have the safest possible dentifrice. If you ask your dentist about Squibb Dental Cream, he will heartily approve it because he knows that Squibb's contains no grit, no astringents—nothing which might injure the youngest of teeth or mouths.

Even in the best of families, you'll often find some one with a tendency towards sensitive gums. How Squibb Dental Cream will delight his mouth! It soothes tender gums each time you use it. For it contains more than 50% Squibb Milk of Magnesia, a soothing, effective antacid dentists have used for years for this very purpose

And to be sure, there's at least one vigorous smoker in the family who will delight in the refreshing action of Squibb's! It helps the mouth keep so clean and sweet . . . freshens as it cleans!

In fact—this one fine dentifrice is ideally suited to each individual member of your family. You couldn't select a dentifrice which will do more towards promoting better teeth and brighter smiles.

Why not order several tubes from your druggist, and put one in each bathroom? Notice how soon teeth around the house begin to gleam . . . how healthy and refreshed your mouth feels . . . how much freer, indeed, from even tiny dental troubles the whole family keeps.

WHAT ABOUT DIET? Modern dentistry recognizes that foods rich in vitamins and minerals are important to sound, healthy teeth. And incidentally they are wonderful for sparkling eyes and clear complexions. So resolve to eat each day some fresh fruit, at least one green vegetable and some form of milk. Squibb Cod-Liver Oil is an unusually dependable source of both Vitamins A and D. Available in both the mint-flavored form and plain, it is recommended by many physicians, especially for the diet of growing children.

WHAT ABOUT ACIDITY? Dentists stress the importance of a balanced diet because they know that a great deal of dental trouble is caused, not only by local germ acids present in the mouth, but also by an acid condition resulting from careless diet and the strain of modern life. It often affects teeth, vigor and health. If your physician or dentist suggests that you take an antacid, here are two superlative Squibb antacids. Squibb Milk of Magnesia is exceptionally palatable. Squibb Bicarbonate of Soda is pure, efficacious and free from bitterness.

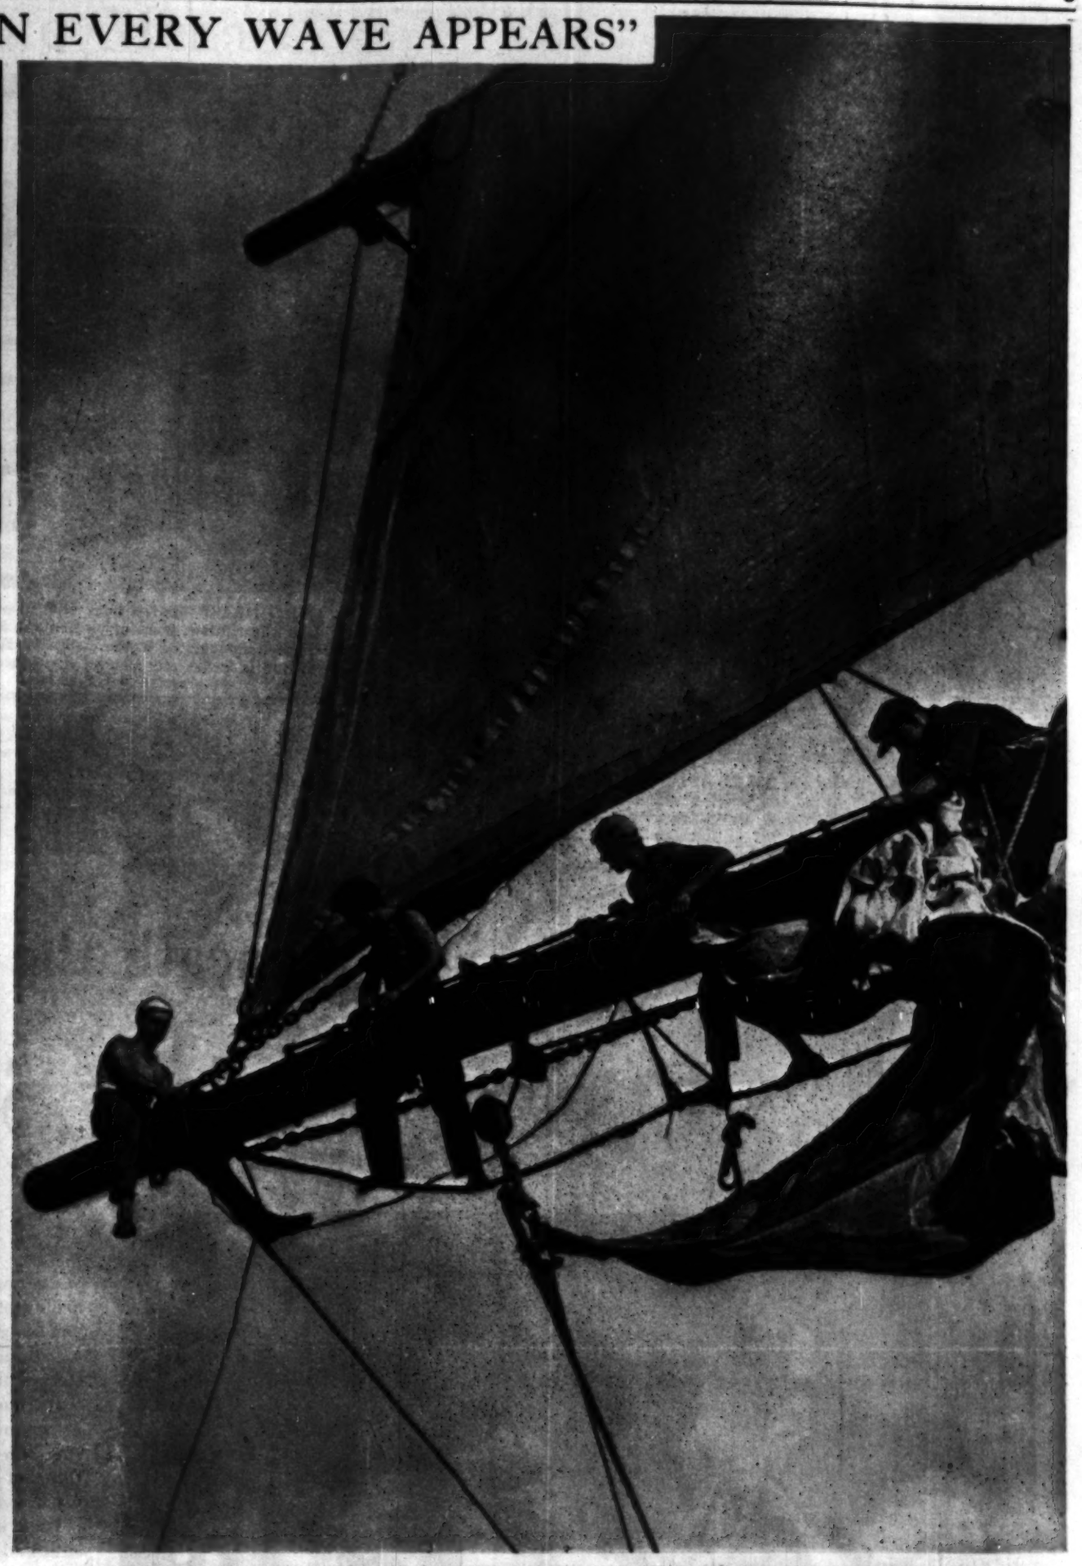
GUARDS THE DANGER LINE

"AND INSTANT DEATH ON EVERY WAVE APPEARS"

ABOARD A WAVE-SWEPT WINDJAMMER—The C. B. Pedersen, a sailing vessel that has often participated in ocean races between England and Australia, ships Cape Horn "graybeards." The pictures appearing here, visualizing the drama and the dangers of the deep, are the work of George Beachcroft. This one, he writes, "shows a big sea coming on board on the port side of the ship. Only the foresail and the topsail are set. The sea completely swept the whole fore part of the vessel, and caused great damage."



"YE WHO DWELL AT HOME, YE DO NOT KNOW THE TERRORS OF THE MAIN"—A storm scene that reflects the perils, the hardships, and the picturesque and thrilling romance of life before the mast in an age fast passing away. "These men, who are in the starboard watch," Mr. Beachcroft comments, "are on the fore upper topsail yard, and are setting a sail in place of one that was blown right out of the bolt ropes. This job took about two hours, and was a very dangerous one, as the ship was rolling heavily."

"THE WINDS ALOUD HOWL O'ER THE MASTS"—"A watch is up aloft furling the big mainsail. This sail is the largest on the ship, and in heavy weather both watches are called to bring the sail up on to the yard."

SPINDRIFT: THE AFTERMATH OF A HUGE SEA—"The ship's head is being brought up into the wind, and as she meets the seas she is rising. Two men are at the wheel; only by main force is she kept in control."

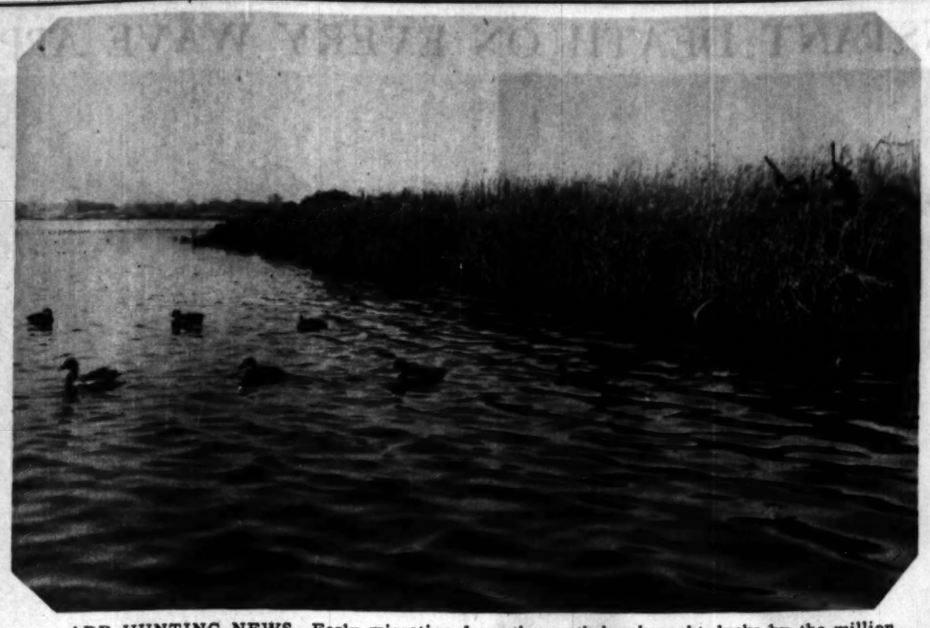
JOHANN DE KALB, a martyr in the cause of American independence. On the editorial page of today's Tribune Clifford Raymond tells of his devotion and of his gallant death on the field of battle.



ADD HUNTING NEWS—Early migration from the north has brought ducks by the million into the marshes of the central west and filled the heart of the sportsman with joy. Paul C. Harper and D. M. O Magic Nights beneath the Moon

where Eyes meet Eyes beneath the Southern Cross

WHILE MUTED STRINGS are plucked, the tap of heels move to a Spanish rhythm . . . skirts swirl and bangles glitter in the light, as eyes meet eyes. . . . Romance is eery as the moonlight and the stars of the Southern Cross look down.

Intriguing as the glance of eyes . . . and subtle as romance . . . thrilling the senses as the measure of a South American dance . . . this is something of the quality, the exhilaration, the unusual zest of "Canada Dry."

Here is a remarkable ginger ale, distinctive, stimulating, delightful. It has its definite quality because it has basic excellence. The very foundation of "Canada Dry" is "Liquid Ginger"—which we make from selected Jamaica ginger root by a special process. This process is exclusively controlled by us and, unlike any other method, retains for "Canada Dry" all of the original aroma, flavor and natural essence of the ginger root. Rigid laboratory control assures uniformity, purity and highest quality. A special process of carbonation enables "Canada Dry" to retain its sparkle long after the bottle is opened.

And as a result this fine old ginger ale is served the wide world over. It has won the connoisseur's nod of approval. At famous hotels and clubs . . . at the Houses of Parliament at Ottawa . . . on transatlantic liners . . . in London . . . in Paris . . . "Canada Dry" is the beverage which has first call. And in countless homes throughout this country its unforgettable flavor, its delightfully subtle aroma are known and cherished.

"Canada Dry" will bring the prestige, the romance, the distinction to your dinner table that it does to famous places the world over. Know the marvelous flavor of this fine old ginger ale. Order it today in the Hostess Package.

HAVE YOU TRIED — ?

Canada Dry's Sparkling Orange. A remarkable new carbonated orange drink. Made from pure fresh orange juice, and containing the natural fruit pulp —a true orange beverage. Ask for it where you buy "Canada Dry."

The Cute Menace

By W. E. Hill

[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]

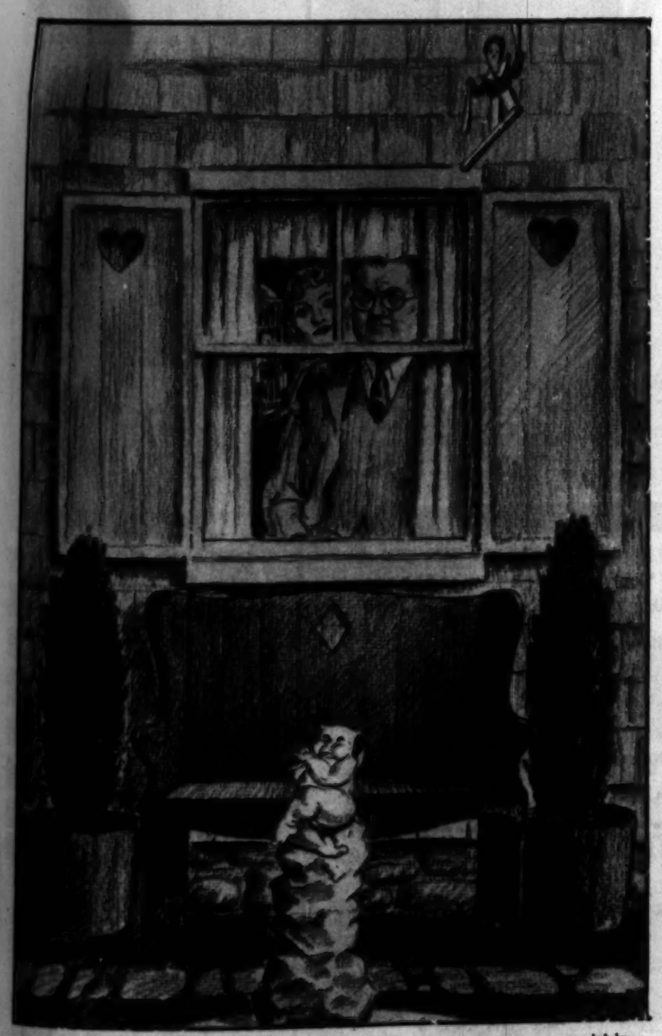
The cute apartment. These modern two-room-kitchenette-bath-and-dinette apartments are getting smaller and cuter by the minute. Cute brides and grooms furnish them in the cutest ways imaginable, with gift shop ship models, electric imitation coals in the fireplaces, and department store make believe maple secretary desks that are really radios disguised. (This living room, as you have probably noticed, is done medieval-colonial, and the bride will tell you, "Curtis and I think it is really quite cute!"

Cute radio broadcast. "Now, folks, at the close of this broadcast, offered by the Alphonsive Spaghetti Rascals, courtesy station OYOY, Corliss G. Whimsey announcing, I hope when I say 'good night all,' you will answer 'good night, Corliss,' and even though I can't hear you, I will feel as if I knew each and every one of you personally. And each of you who has enjoyed the Alphonsive hour, will, I hope, write me a nice little note telling me of your enjoyment. This is Corliss G. Whimsey announcing. Good night, all!"

The cute tearoom. "The ham pot pie is out, all we got left is the minced pork on toast." The cuter the tearoom the less food there will be, as these two lovely ladies, who had heard that Rose Lillian Horrigan's Dixie Grotto Tearoom was as cute and quaint as any place in town, are discovering to their sorrow.

Cute news reel stuff. News reel fans dearly love that portion of the world's activities which shows a dancing class practicing on the roof of a tall building, with all the girls being as cute as cute can be. (This class is composed of society girls—each wears an "S" for "Society" on her uniform—who are studying tap dancing.)

The cut up doctor. This doctor is being right cute to good nurse Connelly this a. m., telling her he's going to discharge her and one thing and another. Nurse Connelly will tell her friends that the doctor is "an awful cute old thing," which is high praise from a graduate nurse.



The cute suburb. Like everything else, suburbia has gone cute within recent years, and even those homes with hardly any frontage to speak of go in for midget formal gardens, weather vanes, and stepping stones. It will be a great day when the people who dwell in them look as cute as the suburban homes.

"Some fun, hey, kid?" says the modern girl, being just as cute in her 1930 way as the sweet young thing of 1903 was when she made believe peek through her fingers at her swain. O, well, other times, other customs.

"Cute and Sixty" has taken place of the old "Sweet and Twenty" of grandma's day. This quartet of roguishness belongs to an insurance convention—wives of trusted executives, to be specific—and they are being very impish for the benefit of a tabloid photographer.

Nothing is cuter than a plump girl in pink flowered chintz overalls, walking along a garden path.

PROTECT YOUR FAMILY from winter's blasts—now with a WEIL-McLAIN BOILER

There's still time to feel secure from the severe weather that's just around the corner. Bring your heating plant up to date now—and make a double saving! These modern Weil-McLain Boilers are in keeping with modern standards of heating convenience and actually reduce your year-after-year fuel costs, too! They make the comforts and conveniences you've always considered luxuries—economies instead.

New time payment plan available

IF you act quickly, your heating contractor can offer you a lasting investment in health, comfort and convenience for your family at a double saving!

Modern, scientific Weil-McLain Boilers are not only lower in price, at present, but the many exclusive features that enable them to fight fuel waste and deliver more heat assure substantial reductions over the cost of operating older, less efficient heating plants. Take the Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler, for example. Beneath its colorfully enameled and insulated steel jacket are many new features of operating convenience and economy — unknown when your present boiler was installed.

Scientific combustion fights high fuel bills

In the Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler, scientific combustion, made possible by the design of the boiler itself, provides more thorough final burning of the fuel. Retarded or incomplete combustion of solid fuels is prevented, because all grates within the fire box are shaking grates and because rounded "live fire" corners in the fire box assure a clean, bright fire at every point. Costly wasting of fuel in the ashpit is stopped.

More heat-absorbing surface saves fuel

There is little purpose in a boiler producing great heat unless that heat can be utilized before it reaches the chimney. In the Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler, the extra width of the fire box in the combustion zone, plus drop web construction, adds to the area of heating surface above the fire and materially increases the heat-absorbing ability of the boiler, thus sending more of the heat from the fuel to your radiators.

Balanced back-and-forth fire travel ends waste up the chimney

As a final safeguard against waste, the Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler has balanced back-and-forth fire travel which cannot short-cut to the chimney or concentrate in the center portion of the flue travel under any conditions. Hot gases from the fire must travel through all the heating surfaces in the boiler, thus fighting fuel waste up the chimney.

More convenient operation

This boiler has features never before combined in a single boiler. Its fuel carrying capacity means lengthened firing periods. A choke damper controlled from the front of the boiler—automatic draft regulation—and provision for hot water coil and indirect water heater all mean easier and more convenient operation.

See your heating contractor at once!

There are Weil-McLain Boilers to meet all requirements. Call your heating contractor or mail the coupon today for valuable new booklet—"Helpful Hints on Home Heating." Weil-McLain Company, General Offices: 641 West Lake Street, Chicago. Factory and Offices: Michigan City, Ind.; Erie, Pa.

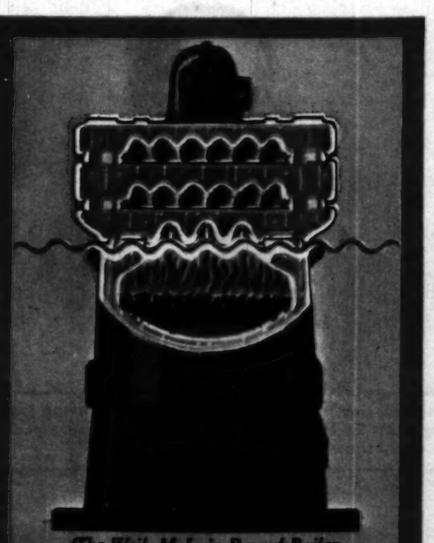
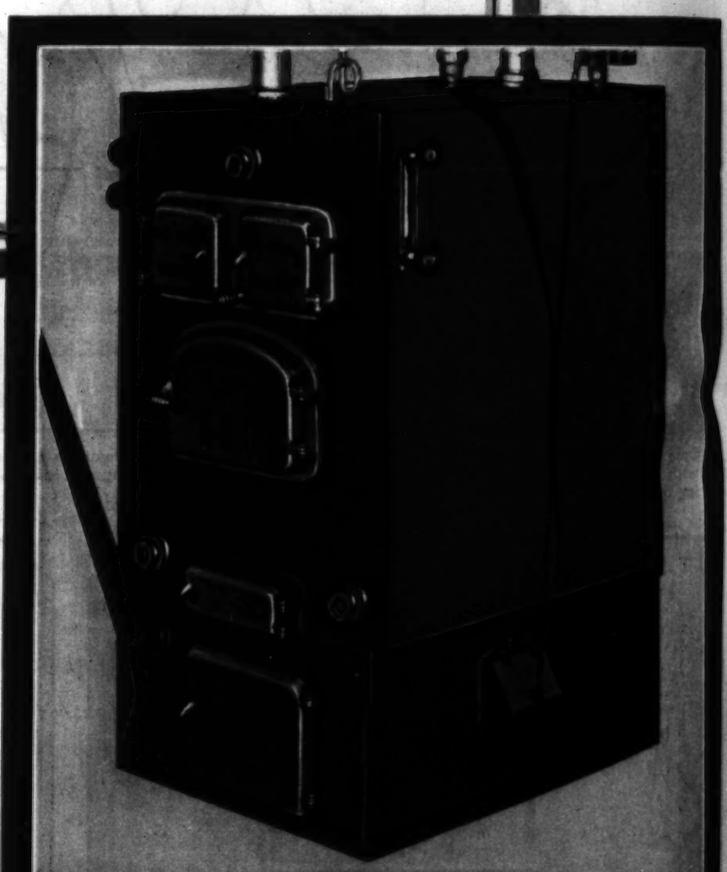
Jacketed Boiler

"Cameo" Radiator



The Weil-McLain Round Boiler

This boiler, famous for its fuel economy and heating efficiency, is typical of the many exclusive advantages which Weil-McLain design brings to home owners. For example, the fuel-saving characteristics of Weil-McLain corrugations like these ~~~ have been built into all Weil-McLain Boilers by placing extra heat-absorbing surface directly above the fire, as well as in all other vital heating surfaces—adding materially to their fuel economy.



A boiler for modern fuels

The Weil-McLain Jacketed Boiler has been designed, not only for the fuel you have been accustomed to use, but for the efficient burning of oil. It is especially suited for oil burning because it provides increased combustion space and heating surface—thus increasing the amount of heat generated and absorbed. Unusually large waterways provide the quickest circulation across the boiler and around all areas of heat concentration—a most important feature in efficient and economical oil heating.

Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt

..Paris acclaims her beauty and her chic

BEAUTY . . . with all the poise of a grande dame of the old régime . . . slim youth in subtly simple Paris frocks . . . a flower face with the serene young brow and burning dark eyes of a Spanish Madonna . . .

Inevitably Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt has captivated French society! Née Gloria Morgan, and married at only eighteen to the third son of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt lived as a girl in Spain, Holland, England and France, and since her husband's death has returned to make her home in Paris.

At Longchamps and Auteuil and at the smartest night clubs of Paris, she is a charming figure. She summers at Biarritz or goes yachting on the Mediterranean. Pearls are her chosen jewels and the gardenia her favorite flower . . . and these accent the incredible whiteness of her skin, smooth as gardenia petals, lustrous as pearls.

"I've lived so long abroad," she says, "that people often ask me: 'Even in Paris, do you still use Pond's?' "

"Indeed, I do," she answers, "and for the best of reasons. With all their taste and chic not even the beauty-wise French can make anything to compare with the famous Two Creams! I always have and always will consider the Cold Cream indispensable to cleanse the skin immaculately, the Vanishing Cream essential for exquisite finish and protection.

"Pond's two charming new preparations," Mrs. Vanderbilt adds, "are in line with the most advanced French methods for caring for the skin . . . The feather-light Tissues to wipe away the cream are marvelously absorbent, and I adore the enchanting new peach color . . . The Freshener to banish oiliness and tighten the skin is such a comfort, for the very name of Pond's means that it is safe to use as often as you please.

"Toutes mes félicitations—Pond's!"

FOLLOW THE FOUR STEPS of Pond's Method to keep your skin always exquisite:

During the day—first, for thorough cleansing, amply apply Pond's Cold Cream over your face and neck, several times, always after exposure. Pat in with upward, outward strokes, waiting to let the fine oils sink into the pores and float all dust and dirt to the surface.

Second—wipe away with Pond's Cleansing Tissue soft, ample super-absorbent. (Tissues come in an enchanting peach color now, as well as white.)

Third—saturate cotton with Pond's Freshener and pat briskly over face and neck to banish oiliness, close and reduce pores, tone and firm.

Last—smooth on Pond's Vanishing Cream for powder base and protection. Use this beneficent cream not only on the face, but on neck, shoulders, arms, wherever you are powdering.

At bedtime—cleanse immaculately with Cold Cream and wipe away with Tissues. If your skin is dry, pat in a little fresh cream and leave on overnight.

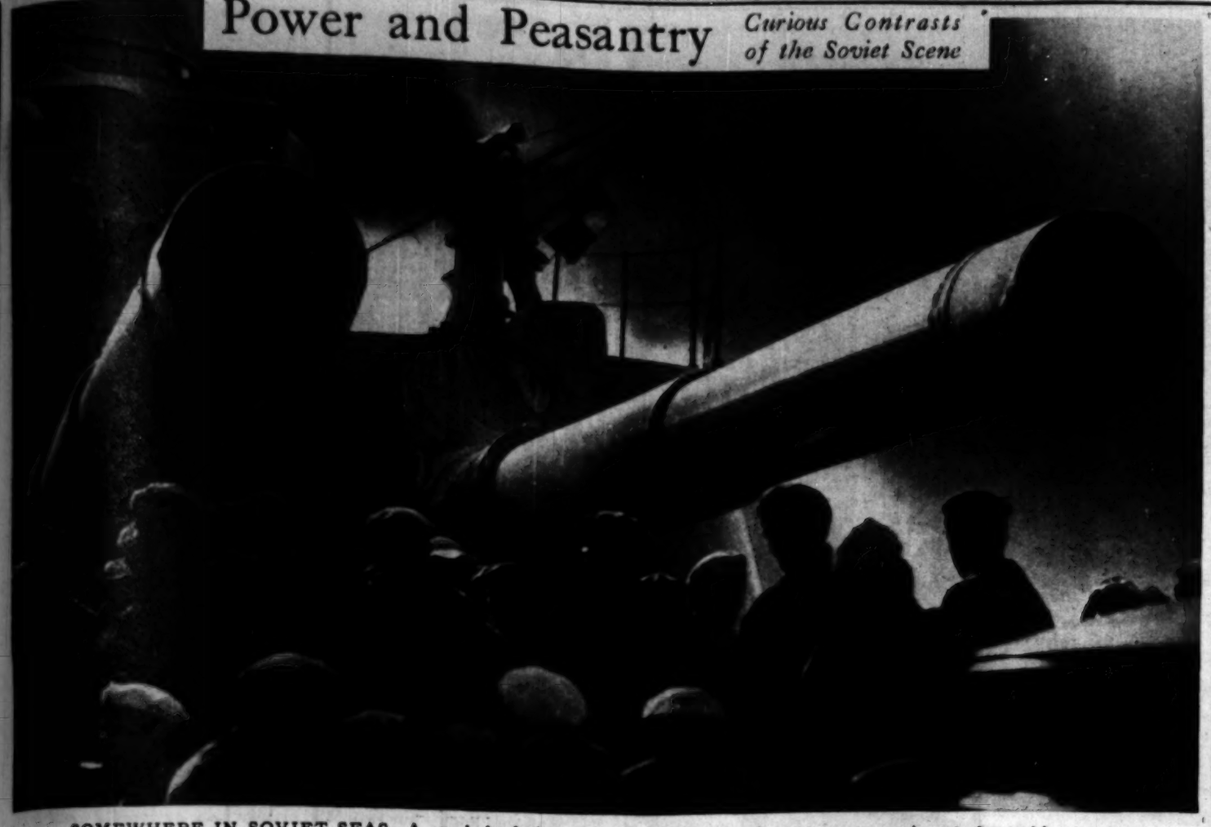
Power and Peasantry

Curious Contrasts of the Soviet Scene



SOMEWHERE IN SOVIET SEAS—A symbol of that enigma, Russian naval power, appears in a red warship engaged in battle maneuvers. A knot of sailors has gathered under the gleaming guns, and beneath the smoke that belches from the funnels. (Pacific and Atlantic photos.)

A PROLETARIAN PROBLEM—Three types of the Russian masses, ignorant, superstitious, and stolid, whose inertia is one of the greatest stumbling blocks to grandiose schemes of communization. This study and those below, among the most eloquent photographic portrayals that have come out of the soviet states since the revolution, are from a new Russian movie; it has remained for the cinema studio to set forth with startling vividness, though perhaps with a shade too much of mysticism, subtle nuances of life and character that persistently elude the news camera. (Wide World photo.)

THE HERDSMAN—A study of master and beast whose juxtaposition, with its suggestion of mental likeness, is perhaps not unintentional. (Wide World photo.)

AN OLD ONE—Conservative, hostile to the new fangled, she and her Russian sisters are legion.

MURDERER—A "criminal" confessing the crime prescribed by the scenario, and typifying the sottish, the bestial, the worst in the dregs of Russia. (Wide World photo.)

THE HARVEST—A character study expressed in photography of rare artistry. Of such is the cast of "The Earth," directed by O. Dovjenko, whose argument is the conflict between peasantry and mechanical innovation. (Wide World photo.)

CROCODILE TEARS? That's not the happiest of phrases to couple with Mitzi Green of the movies, of course. And who knows but that Mitzi really had developed a great fondness for the Thanksgiving bird? (Pacific and Atlantic photo.)

WHEN THE 'COON IS IN THE PUMPKIN it's not often that he's caught in the act by the camera. But here he is, exposed by the flashlight, pulling out pumpkin seeds faster than Jack Horner ever snared a plum.

Why did you love Beer?

Every real joy . . . every help remains

SOME people drank beer at mealtime, as a premier aid to digestion.

More drank it at bedtime, as the finest aid to sleep. The esters and aldehydes combated digestive disturbance, the chief cause of insomnia. The hops quieted the nerves. The food properties drew the blood from the head.

But the millions drank it for its sparkle, flavor, foam and zest. The height of hospitality decreed beer.

All those joys, all those helps remain to you in Atlas Special Brew. And they are better than the old.

You Are Not Deprived

Atlas Special Brew is better than our old brews. And we brewed the best.

It is brewed by the same master brewers, in the same exacting ways. It is based on the same fine barley malt, and the same Bohemian hops.

We use a like process, immensely improved. The product is gradually cooled, then filtered through white wool pulp. The brew is aged, as in old days, for months. The bottles are sterilized before filling.

We treat the water, to match the flavor of famous European brews.

The world never knew a better malt-and-hop brew than Atlas Special Brew, save for the diminished alcohol which we evaporate. Nothing ever served you better as a quieting delight.

Forget the Alcohol

Alcohol in beer was always a minor factor. If you were served Atlas Special Brew, with it and without it, you could not discover a difference.

So the idea that you must turn to home brews, or to other makeshifts, is a myth. All that beer brought to you in delight or help is at its utmost in Atlas Special Brew.

Atlas Special Brew is supplied by over 30,000 grocers, delicatessen stores and drug stores in Chicago and surrounding states. It costs only 15c a bottle, much less by the case of 24 bottles, so order some now at your store. Look for the green Atlas Special label on each bottle. Atlas Brewing Company, 2107 Blue Island Avenue, Chicago, Ill. LARGE PORES this new way . . .

There's a new way of pore refining scientists have been working on for three years.

It's a way that not only refines pores, but does so in a remarkably short time.

You accomplish this by means of a liquid which is both a cleanser and a solvent.

What it does

First it thoroughly cleans surface of skin, then it enters pores and dissolves out accumulated pore residue. Relieved of this residue, pores shrink back to normal size.

(Diagram above shows how solvent of real penetrating power is needed to enter minute curving pore channel and dissolve out this unexpelled residue which causes pores to become enlarged. No ordinary method will do it.)

Observe how skin is left cool, clean, exhilarated. Due to a special ingredient used in the formula this delightful cooling sensation remains half an hour or longer after liquid is applied.

Use after cleansing cream to remove all traces of grease, all lingering particles of dirt, dust.

Use during day to cleanse skin when renewing make-up. Make-up then applied gives you the lustrous look of glowing health.

New delicate skin texture

Note, please, the new delicate skin texture, the vivid cleanness regular use of Hinds Toning Cleanser brings you.

Do not confuse Hinds Toning Cleanser with skin tonics and fresheners. It is a liquid cleanser which refines pores. Positively will not dry the skin.

You get it at all drug and department stores. Price 65¢. Buy Hinds Toning Cleanser today. An utterly new conception of skin care awaits you.

HERE'S A NEW LIQUEFYING cleansing cream. Hinds Cleansing Cream, it's called. The moment you apply, it melts, penetrates pores, cleanses them of dirt, dust, make-up. 40¢ and 65¢.

GREASELESS SOFTENING CREAM counteracts dry skin but contains no grease to make you uncomfortable at night. Hinds Texture Cream, 40¢ and 65¢.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE STAMP ALBUM

STAMPS OF THE NATIONS

$10,000.00 IN CASH PRIZES

This is SET NO. 6

This is the Stamp of:

Write name of Nation here

CLUE: Vienna is the principal city of the nation which issues the stamp, a part of which is shown at the top. The middle portion of this composite stamp represents a British colony whose capital city is Hamilton. The lower part represents a nation ruled by a King named Victor Emmanuel III.

This is the Stamp of:

Write name of Nation here

CLUE: Some 780 miles due east of Charleston, S. C., lies the island group represented by the upper part of this stamp. The central portion is part of a stamp of a nation drained by the River Po. The bottom is part of a stamp issued by a nation partly bounded on the south by Jugo-Slavia.

This is the Stamp of:

Write name of Nation here

CLUE: The former rulers of the nation represented by the upper part of this stamp were once termed "Caesars." The middle part of the stamp represents a nation allied with Germany in the World War. It was then a monarchy, but is now a republic. The part of the stamp shown at the bottom represents an island possession famous for a species of onion grown there in abundance.

• THE RULES •

1. Every Sunday for 14 Sundays, the Chicago Tribune will print in this "Stamp Album," a set of 3 composite "Stamps of the Nations." Each set of stamps, when cut apart and assembled properly, will make complete stamps. The public is invited to put the stamps together and name the countries they represent. The Chicago Tribune will pay $10,000.00 in Cash Prizes for the best answers! See Prize List at right.
2. The composite stamps must be cut out, assembled and pasted or pinned together. Below each stamp must be written the name of the country it represents. A total of 42 stamps will be printed—3 each Sunday for 14 Sundays. IMPORTANT! Hold all stamps until you have the complete set of 42. Then send them to "Stamps," Chicago Tribune, Post Office Box 1539, Chicago, Illinois.
3. This contest is open to everyone—men, women, boys and girls—except employes of the Chicago Tribune and their families. It does not matter where you live.
4. You pay nothing. Just prove your skill.
5. All stamps must be in by midnight 21 days after Set No 14 is published. Each entry should be sent by First Class Mail, Postage Prepaid. Entries with insufficient postage will be returned by the Post Office Department. A letter must be sent with your entry giving your name and address and telling the name of your favorite Stamp and why you like it best. Letters must not exceed 50 words.

   Contestants may send as many sets as they wish, but no contestant will be entitled to more than one prize. No entries will be returned.
6. The judging will be based upon the accuracy of putting the stamps together, correctly naming the countries they represent, neatness, and merit of the accompanying letter. Elaborate entries will receive no greater consideration than the most simple entries. The prime requirement will be accuracy. Therefore any school boy or girl has the same chance to obtain a prize as any man or woman.
7. SCHOOL TEACHERS, NOTE: To interest School Teachers in encouraging their pupils to enter this instructive and educational game, the Chicago Tribune will award 5 prizes of $100.00 each to the teachers of public, parochial or private schools of grammar or high school grades, whose pupils rank highest among the winners. Teachers! This new game will familiarize your pupils with many foreign countries. Help them win!
8. You need not purchase the Chicago Tribune to compete. You may copy or trace the stamps from the Tribune and assemble the stamps from the copies you have made. The Tribune may be examined at any of its Offices or at Public Libraries free of charge.
9. The judges will be a committee appointed by the Chicago Tribune. Entrants agree to accept their decision as final. In case of ties a duplicate award will be given each tying contestant.

THE SPECTACLE OF FIRE THRILLS CHICAGO CROWDS—The south side of the loop is darkened with a gigantic pall of smoke by flames which destroyed the ramp leading into the Pere Marquette yards from Roosevelt road and the river, burned a grain warehouse and a string of freight cars, and tied railroad and street traffic into a knot. Fireboats which played a major role in extinguishing the conflagration added picturesqueness to the sight.

FRIENDS!

Is anything too good for him? Is anything too safe? You know it's not! And you know what you are doing when you give your child Castoria.

It will help to keep your child "the picture of health." Because it prevents many little upsets that make a child cross and restless. It soothes away those fretful spells before they make him feverish. It coaxes the little bowels to work before he has had time to become badly constipated.

When it's something more serious, Castoria is still a mother's standby. Be sure there's always a bottle in the house. Be sure it's never empty. Colic calls for quick relief. Constipation must be checked without delay. You can always trust this proven remedy. Children love its taste and will always take it. Don't resort to anything stronger! The case that Castoria won't help is a case for the doctor.

Castoria is sold in every drugstore. The genuine bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. It is a harmless vegetable preparation. Always safe to give for those little pains that worry an infant. Always ready to ease older children who are "out of sorts" and in need of gentle regulation.

ALREADY IT'S CATCHING THE FANCY OF FASHION

This unique folding Lipstick by Lenthéric

THIS unusual lipstick is indeed the newest creation of French cosmetic art. Being indelible, it will not rub off . . . no matter what the occasion. It is presented in three natural, exuberant, youthful colors. ● This triumph in cosmetics has been withheld by Lenthéric, awaiting its new exquisitely chic folding holder. Beautifully executed in silver and gold and silver and black, this holder is a rare expression of the jeweler's skill . . . and at the same time fascinatingly practical. ● You open it in the manner of a folding pocket comb and the lipstick emerges . . . you close it and the lipstick disappears in its protecting case. There is no cap to come off. Hence the lipstick can never stain the contents of your handbag. ● This new Lenthéric Lipstick with many other attractive Lenthéric products is available at leading department stores and at your favorite druggist.

1. Closed, ready for your handbag. 2 & 3. Partly unfolded, to use as you prefer. No cap to take off or lose. No waste. No danger of soiling your handbag

WAKE IT UP WITH NIVEA CREME!

Oh, the joy of seeing your skin attain and retain silken-smoothness—the beauty that is really sleeping now. Nivea Creme will give you just such joy—bring sheltered body-skin beauty to your face and hands.

It is the favored beauty skin-guardian in Germany today because it normalizes the skin, puts back nature's beauty essentials taken out by time and toil, wind and weather, powder and rouge. It's the *Eucerite—an ingredient exclusive with Nivea Creme—that so successfully accomplishes this joyous thing.

Give Nivea* Creme a chance to show how well it works—used for cleanser, powder base, soothing night creme—as well as a protective from exposure. In tubes or adorable boudoir-jars. Look for the blue and white package on drug and toilet goods counters of the better drug and department stores.

NIVEA CREME
(Pronounced Niv-ee-a)

for Half-sick Underweight Children

Even a husky child needs all its strength to resist disease. If your child is pale, listless or tires easily, you must be especially careful. Danger months are here. A half-sick, run-down child does not have the strength to fight disease.

Father John's Medicine is a simple food medicine that has stood the test of 75 years. Children thrive on it amazingly. They seem to pick up, become more alert, to gain in strength and vigor.

This is because Father John's Medicine brings, in combination with other valuable ingredients, all the benefits of cod liver oil and summer sunshine to sick children. It is rich in vitamins. Finicky eaters recover appetite. Their food somehow seems to do them more good. Their color improves, they gain in weight. Soon they are laughing and playing as of old.

Just ask your druggist for Father John's Medicine and have your child take it regularly. Over 184 hospitals and institutions use it regularly. It contains no drugs, no alcohol, just simple proved elements that may make a vital difference in your child's health and vigor.

ILLINOIS LAUNCHES A NEW MEDICAL CENTER—State and state university officials lay the corner stone of a $1,500,000 medical and dental building on Chicago's west side. A group of four buildings erected by the state department of public welfare and also constituting part of this west side center was dedicated at the same time. Left to right, George A. Barr, president of the board of trustees of the University of Illinois; William Browne, secretary of the medical school; Gov. Emmerson, and President Chase of the university. (Tribune photo.)

The funeral was described as "not spectacular"—except for the bronze casket and floral pieces estimated to have cost $15,000. (Tribune photo.)

"But I keep my skin perfectly clean!" you answer if someone suggests Skin Congestion as the cause of your complexion worries.

Of coutse....soap-and-water clean! But if you want lovely skin in spite of smoky cities and dusty roads, you must cleanse deep down in the pores where these millions of tiny "breathers" become clogged.

This Cream eliminates impurities from millions of pores

Plough's Cleansing Cream makes this deep pore-cleansing easy. Its light oils quickly free every pore of dust, smut and make-up and effectively overcome the causes of skin congestion.

Use this cream tonight! See for yourself how immaculately fresh and clean—how clear-toned, smooth and beautiful it leaves your complexion.

Plough's Cleansing Cream is of the highest quality and economically priced wherever beauty creations are sold. The 50c size contains more than twice the quantity of the 30c size, and the 75c size is the most economical to buy.

*Skin Congestion denotes the presence of a hardened substance in the pores caused by the accumulation of dust, smut and make-up.

We also suggest Plough's Peroxide (Vanishing) Cream, 50c and 30c, for protection and Plough's Cold Cream, 50c and 30c, for nourishing the skin.

One of the many Gaytees of feather-weight rubber, available in fern green and the other new costume colors. Ask to see the Avalon model.

Just outside the entrance of one of Fifth Avenue's most famous shops, on a wet day, appeared this kit-fox trimmed tweed suit and felt sports hat, in the very new fern green. A yellow blouse stitched in green, and trim green Gaytees complete the costume.

Smart shoppers favor the Gaytees ensemble

When you have a reputation for chic, you can't let down even on stormy days! And it's no longer necessary, of course — now that one's smartest costumes can be made even smarter by the addition of harmonizing Gaytees. Paris so favors this American innovation that leading French couturiers call their rainy-day creations, "Gaytees ensembles." At the August showings of such notables as Jenny, Mary Nowitzky and Chantal, mannequins wore matching Gaytees with both town and country clothes . . . One sees these new Gaytees ensembles everywhere — at the smart restaurants, entering the theatres, in the exclusive shopping districts . . . You can match your own new costumes with the same Gaytees models that Paris favors. But be sure to visit your favorite shop now, while styles, sizes and colors are complete! . . . Gaytees are made only by United States Rubber Company.

FEMININITY INVADES THE SPORTS WORLD

Outdoor Togs Banish the Masculine Touch, and, While Intensely Practical, They Are Also Graceful and Charming.

This Schiaparelli sports suit of black wool and white chamois has a picturesque workman's sash and scarf of bright, red, hand-knit silk.

Schiaparelli gives extra warmth to this wine-red, striped woolen sports suit with a jaunty vest of tan leather to match the flaring gauntlets.

Augustabernard combines white kid and dark brown velveteen in one of the smartest ensembles of the season. The inside blouse is of white crepe marocain. The gloves are dark brown antelope.

Paris Snapshots

¶ Worth's smartest clients are choosing some shade of brown for their new sports clothes, and Jane Regny's pink and brown jersey frock is causing a sensation in feminine sporting circles here.

¶ Worth has invented a handy beauty-kit for the coquettish sportswoman with everything you need to restore your make-up fitted into a pigskin case that looks like a small camera.

¶ Caddyless golf belts in bright leather, with wallet pockets at the sides fitted with sections for tees, purse, cigarets, matches, score cards and pencil, are English novelties that have won the hearts of smart Parisienne golfers.

¶ The latest thing in Paris raincoats is of lapis-lazuli blue crepe de chine, with double sleeves and pointed pockets, piped in silver kid.

¶ Paris likes inside sweaters, hand-knit of soft wool, with transparent yokes and underaleeves of hand-knit silk.

Jenny's new sports costume has a slip-on, tunic jacket of fawn colored pony and a one piece frock of fawn wool velour.

By Bettina Bedwell.

PARIS.—(Special.)—The Big Change that has transformed feminine fashions is nowhere more evident than in the new sports clothes. Paris couturiers crown Feminine Charm queen of beauty, and name her Miss Universe, and the new sovereign's power is just as absolute in the sports realm as it is in every province of the sartorial kingdom.

"A girl should be just as alluring wielding a golf club or leaning on the joy stick of an airplane as dancing a waltz or handing a cocktail," say the couture prime ministers. Of course, it's a different kind of allure, expressed in vital, dynamic movement, rather than in languid grace, but it remains thrillingly feminine, for all that. Sportswomen are no longer accused of copying men; they have made sports their own, and so they no longer dress up like their brothers to play games. Even when they appropriate some masculine garments like lumberjacks' blouses, peaked caps or plus-fours, they feminize them to such an extent that the results have little resemblance to the originals.

It was Jean Patou who re-discovered the supreme attraction of opposites, as applied to clothes designed to accentuate natural charms, and, consequently, he banished everything "mannish" from his sports mode, while keeping it intensely practical, both in cut and fabric. Other couturiers have taken up the same idea, and some carry it even farther toward femininity—like Suzanne Talbot, who makes her sports skirts only eight inches off the floor and who replaces the classic trousers of her ski-costumes by angora tights and short plaid kilts.

The new sports silhouette follows the outline prescribed for other daytime clothes, with wide shoulders, slender waist and reasonably flared skirt; and is not this the ideal athlete's figure translated into terms of furs and fabrics?

Of course, the first thing to be taken into consideration in designing sports costumes is freedom of movement, but from then on there are no limits and, this season, the Paris couturiers have invented dozens of new, delightful details to relieve the monotony of classic lines. There are Lelong's double-breasted and belted, three-quarter coats; his double-breasted, cape-back jackets; Chanel's full length cape coats; Patou's waist length, slip-on jacket blouses of bleached taupe and his peaked caps with fur earlaps to be tied on top of the head or under the chin; Regny's jolly, Scotch tartan frocks, skirts, scarfs, handkerchiefs, and linings, and her Russian tunic sweaters—not to mention the novelties, sketched on this page, which I shall describe for you in a minute or two!

New sports materials are prettier than ever. The more manly tweeds have faded out of the style picture, leaving flecked woolens, woven of wool and silk or wool and ostrich feathers; thick, woolly diagonals that look like snow on fur; piece-dyed tweeds and jersey tweeds; or plain monk's cloth in the new, rich reds, greens, blues, and browns. Cloky jerseys with raised patterns, plain or in two colors, are probably the biggest favorites, though broadcloth-finished jerseys, corduroy and velveteen come in close seconds.

Corduroy and velveteen are ideal sports fabrics. Their soft surfaces make them dangerously becoming to the out-of-doors complexion; they wear forever and they can even be washed without damage.

Sports beauty is certainly skin chic, this season, with skins both in their wild, furry, and tame tanned states doing their bit for the smartness of nearly every Paris sports costume. Flat furs—like pony, shaved lamb, caracul, astrakhan, and Persian lamb—that are as durable as they are warm and pretty—make jackets, tunics, belts, scarfs, vests, and gloves.

Washable leather, treated so that it rivals the most supple material, is equally warm and practical and is liked by many courturiers for blouses and knickers, as well as for coats and accessories. And these new leather clothes have nothing in common with the old-fashioned leather coats that irresistibly suggested rain and mechanics; they are just as lovely and luxurious as any other elements of the modern wardrobe, and that's saying a mouthful, as any one who saw the winter collections will testify.

As I said above, some Paris couturiers favor long sports skirts, but the leading sports creators are pretty well agreed upon twelve inches from the ground as the smart length. Schiaparelli, Jane Regny, Lucien Lelong, and Jean Patou are of this opinion. Chanel, to be sure, does show some sports skirts that just cover the knees, but she puts tight knee breeches to match under them.

Knee breeches, by the way, of corduroy, chamois skin, velveteen, or wool, are practically always present with split skirts as well as with abbreviated hems.

Jenny makes the sports costume, sketched today on this page, skin chic with a knee length, slip-on tunic jacket of fawn-colored pony, cleverly crenellated round the hem, like upside-down medieval ramparts; it has a standing, turn down collar and the ends of the little pony skin cravat are crenellated to match.

This jacket is worn over a perfectly simple one piece wool velour frock. The twisted belt is of brown antelope, stitched with fawn colored silk, and so are the little bonnet and the envelope purse.

Schiaparelli's novel sports ensemble borrows the picturesque chic of the French workman's sash and scarf. There's a wrap around skirt of black wool worn over knickers of white washable chamois skin. The raglan blouse with revers that can be worn high or low is also of white chamois. The workman's sash belt that is worn wrapped round and round the necessarily slender waist is bright red silk hand-knit tricot, as is the scarf.

The three-quarter coat of black embossed wool that completes this costume appears on the little lady to the right. It has large, comfy, hip pockets with turn down flaps.

Another jaunty Schiaparelli costume of self-striped, wine-red woolen uses stripes in different ways, all to the good of the smart effect. The flaps on the hips of the jacket's flaring peplum hide pockets. A sleeveless vest of supple, tan leather with a turn down collar is worn under the jacket and over a silk tricot blouse in wine-red. You can see the effect on the small figure. The bow tie is of wine-red silk.

The flaring gauntlets are tanned leather, and Schiaparelli's new sports belt of twisted leather thongs in tan and wine-red, may be worn with either jacket or gilet.

Last, but far from least, comes Augustabernard's sports knock-out of white kid and dark brown velveteen. The seven-eighths coat of white kid is lined with brown velveteen and brown velveteen makes the upper part of its white kid collar. A yoke extending in points on the upper sleeves gives it the proper wide-shouldered effect. It is cuffless, like many of Augustabernard's new coats, and has a round belt of white kid fastened by ivory rings.

The simple, slightly flaring skirt is of brown velveteen. The inside blouse is of white crepe marocain, ornamented by horizontal and diagonal tuckings.

Antiques on Parade

By Edith Weigle

A commode and old portrait for the antiques show.

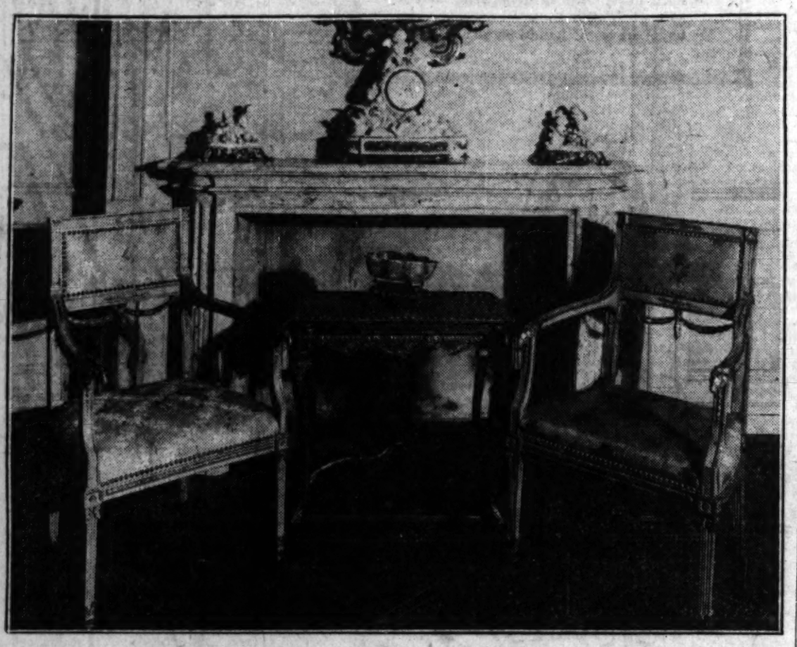
A walnut settee and old tapestry, also destined for the exhibition.

Chicago's Second Exposition of Choice Old Furniture, Silver, and Textiles Opens Tomorrow.

CHICAGO is about to have another exposition of antiques. Last spring a most interesting array of old furniture, silver, prints, and textiles was seen in the first exhibit of its kind held here. Part of the Drake hotel was transformed into a fascinating old curiosity shop of choice objects that attracted lovers of the old and the artistic, and our city took its place with New York, Philadelphia, and Boston as a hospitable haven for an antiques exposition.

The second show starts tomorrow and is planned as an annual event. It is laid out on a larger scale than the first, as fine pieces from the east as well as from the middle west will be on display. The place, this time, is the Palmer house and the time is daily from 11 a. m. to 10:30 p. m. throughout the coming week. Those people who have maintained that New England is the place for antiques and that residents of the corn belt are little interested in the house furnishings of their forebears may gain another hint on the subject if they will take the trouble to observe this very tangible sign of enthusiasm.

Charles Messer Stow, an eastern authority on antiques, says: "I should like to emphasize most strongly that the market for antiques is not confined to New York or even to the eastern seaboard. It covers the whole United States. Whether it be Coshocton, O., or Glendale, Cal., the interest is there, and it craves to be satisfied with antiques. . . . I myself have found in Minnesota as keen an interest in antiques as I have encountered in New England. Just as an example, I might cite an account book of a Salem silversmith which I saw for sale in a little town outside Minneapolis, and which has since been sold to the Essex institute in Salem, where it most emphatically belongs. This gave evidence to me that the cause of antiques has its proponents in the middle west."



These lovely little Louis XVI. chairs will be seen at the exposition.

The following list of antiques exhibitions certainly proves the growing interest that is being manifested throughout the country:

Nov. 10-15—Palmer house, Chicago.

Nov. 18-21—Hartford, Conn.

Dec. 1-6—Hotel Statler, Boston, Mass.

Dec. 11-13—Washington, D. C.

Feb. 23-26—Portland, Me.

Feb. 27-March 7—Grand Central palace, New York City.

May 4-9—Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia, Pa.

The above list is subject to enlargement.

The pictures today show some of the charming pieces that will be on view at the Chicago show. The Louis XVI. chairs, enameled in green and gold, shown in the largest photograph, will be part of a dining room, including an antique Duncan Phyfe table with covering of old Italian rose point filet, an antique Limoges tea service, and old English Sheffield. The floor covering will be an Aubusson carpet.

Another picture, also of objects which will be exhibited, shows a rare Louis XV. settee in walnut, probably of Italian make, above which hangs an Aubusson tapestry made early in the 18th century. And last, an attractive group composed of a French provincial commode of walnut with original brass mounts, a pair of English blackamoor wall brackets and an old portrait by an artist of the Tintoretto school—all destined for the exposition.

In addition to these articles there will be a genuine Empire walnut desk, secured in Rome this summer and brought here about two months ago; two 18th century chests of drawers of elaborate marquetry work; a fine English tapestry of the 18th century; a Georgian living room with old chintz hangings; a walnut secretary with original glass front doors; a low butler's tray; a Chippendale card table of brown mahogany with delicately formed legs, and a concertina movement (also called a "grasshopper movement"), and many other equally intriguing pieces.

It looks like a perfectly grand week for the antiques fans.

Friendly Fireplaces

By WillElla de Campi

The Open Hearth and Glowing Coals Cast a Spell That Even the Practical 20th Century Cannot Break.

FIREPLACES, though they are not actually needed to give warmth in this day of super-service heating plants, are essential to the livableness and friendly character of many a room. There is a little poem which, to my mind, happily expresses the imaginative spirit which emanates from a fireplace:

The fire upon the hearth doth glow,
And there is stillness everywhere,
And, like winged spirits, here and there,
The firelight shadows flutter go.

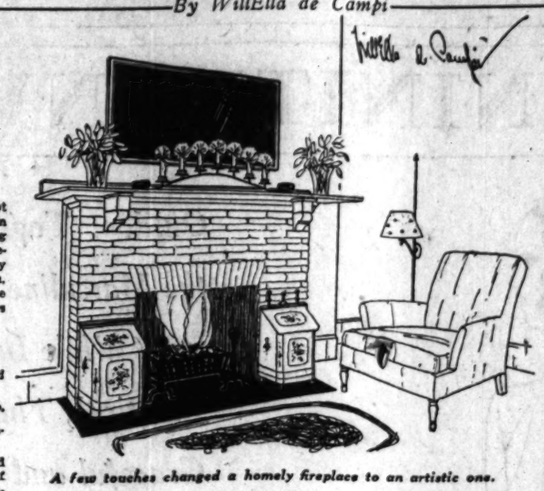
No sad loneliness, but a glowing contentment in this thought.

As important as the well planned flues and drafts is the handling of decorations and equipment which complement the fireplace itself. Andirons, fire tools and screens should be carefully selected with an eye to suitability and artistic worth as well as to usefulness. Then the mantel shelf and overmantel treatment must be considered. Often we see a jumbled, incongruous assortment of diverse objects which are a distraction rather than a complement to the fireplace itself. Good balance should be one of the first requisites of arrangement here. Pairs of decorative objects on the mantel shelf are almost invariably in order, since they help to give a sense of poise and restfulness.

Well placed groups, too, are quite appropriate. In an American colonial room, for instance, a group of silhouettes in narrow black or gilt frames might fittingly be used for overmantel decoration. Or, in a Georgian room there might be a row of colorful Chinese figuring on the mantel shelf. In a modern room simplicity should be the keynote. Here a square mirror over the fireplace might be framed by a narrow metal band and on the mantel shelf there might be a distinctive piece of modern sculpture—nothing more.

When there is no mantel shelf decoration is often afforded by means of a dignified painting, paneled directly into the wall above the fireplace. Old toile or formal floral linen, or even a section of decorative wall paper, may be used with pleasing results. Panels so handled may be flanked by pairs of electric sidelights or by candle sconces in some design which would be in keeping with the character of the room.

Typical of the average apartment or small house fireplace is the one shown in today's illustration. The fireplace, to begin with, was built of plain red brick, with white mortar lines, and the mantel shelf was of oak—you know the kind! But this one has been rescued from mediocrity by means of a distinctive treatment and a skillful use of interesting accessories.



A few touches changed a homely fireplace to an artistic one.

First of all, the bricks and mortar were given a glaze of umber to tone them down pleasingly. Then the mantel shelf was painted black to match the andirons and fire tools of black iron. At each side of the hearth stands a tôle firebox, one for kindling wood and papers, the other for coal.

On the mantel shelf there is an iron candelabra which holds large, jade green candles. A bucket shaped vase of amber glass is placed at each end. These vases are filled with graceful branches, their stems showing through the glass in an intricate, fascinating pattern. A mirror on the wall above the mantel reflects the glow of the candles, giving a delightful play of light and shadow and a mysterious depth to the room.

Another attractive treatment is used in an Italian dining room. Here the mantel is of stone, and the walls are finished in rough plaster, tinted a pale blue. The only pieces on the mantel shelf are a pair of heavy Italian renaissance candlesticks holding ivory candles. Then, on the wall space above the mantel, there is a large Della Robbia plaque, its bright, clear colors giving life and interest to the whole arrangement.

A more delicate plan is used to decorate the mantel in a feminine bedroom. On the white marble mantel shelf there is a pair of quicksilver glass lamps which reflect all the light and color of the room in their gleaming surface. They are fitted with watermelon pink plaited silk shades. Between these two lamps in the center of the shelf there is a lovely clock which is decorative as well as useful.

To take away the plainness from the wall above, four colorful flower prints in narrow, dull silver frames are effectively grouped. Though this delightful treatment is in no way elaborate, it does give a most decided sense of individuality to the room which it graces.

Other Kind of Courage

By Gladys Huntington Bevans

Moral Strength—Though It Goes Unheadlined and Unapplauded—Requires More Real Character than Does Physical Bravery.

If your young child's questions (early sex education) are difficult to answer, helpful reading will be suggested by Mrs. Bevans on receipt of a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

AVIATOR Flies Over Pole at Peril.

Fireman Saves Seven Lives at Risk of Own.

Daring Aviators Land Safely—Greeted with Uproar.

Boy Saves Two from Overturned Canoe.

The papers are always running a headline about some act of bravery or daring. We thrill to these accounts of bravery and our imagination is fired by deeds of this sort.

We shall probably always bow down to physical valor and it is right that we should—to valor of any kind.

But we are likely to lose sight of the fact that there is another kind of courage besides the physical kind. That other sort doesn't get into the headlines. It isn't as colorful on the scene of events. But it is as great, as important in character, in life, as physical courage. Perhaps greater.

This other kind of courage which has nothing to do with material things we commonly call moral courage. Of course this doesn't mean moral in the ordinary sense of the word. Moral courage is a general term for intellectual or spiritual bravery.

Full of Opportunities.

Our lives are full of opportunities to show moral courage. When we do show it, there is rarely any one to know—much less applaud. Such courage does not make front page material but it certainly helps the world in its upward climb.

Courage to cling to our opinions in the face of opposition or disapproval, courage to tell the truth under difficult circumstances, courage to be honest in spirit as well as literally honest, courage to think independently—these are only a few forms of moral courage. They are rarely spectacular. Often no one even know of them. But they are worthy of as much admiration as deeds of physical bravery.

We know all this is true but we're apt to think of it only in connection with adults. It's something that we're not apt to relate to children. We're not apt even to ever bring it to their notice.

We let them see plainly our approval of physical courage. We talk about it. This is all right. We should show our admiration of what is admirable. We should appreciate fully our children's bravery and that of their playmates.

Overemphasis.

But usually we go farther. We are apt to be rather free with our use of the word coward. We tend to overemphasize both the fineness of bravery and the shame of cowardice—physical cowardice. We overglorify deeds of valor in man and child, in books and out.

And that is where we make our great mistake. Just because we want our children to be physically brave, we should not leave the ideal of moral courage so far in the background.

Variations in Children.

As children grow old enough to comprehend it we should try to get the idea across to them, either directly or indirectly, that to be courageous does not mean only to be physically brave. We should not of course use the expression moral courage to them, but we should make them understand by explanation or by admiration of some one that there is more than one way to be brave. To stand pain, to tell the truth when it is hard to tell it, to be able to say "No" when it would be easier to say "Yes," to cling to honest opinions in the face of ridicule, to acknowledge you're in the wrong, to stand by a friend when every one else deserts and condemns him—there are many forms of moral courage which a fairly young child, certainly a growing boy and girl, can understand.

There are children, just as there are grown people capable of a high degree of moral courage who might not be capable of great physical courage. Often children like that will be made ashamed or unhappy because their parents are disappointed in them—because those parents hold physical courage and athletic achievement above everything.

There's more to this than appears on the surface. Some children are not physiologically fitted to do deeds of daring. Physical prowess may even have no appeal for them. For instance there are some children—boys too—who do not care to fight. Often they're strong and unafraid—but they don't care to fight. It doesn't interest them. All these children become much mixed up in their minds, when physical courage is surrounded by such glamor as it is—in aviation, in navigation, in exploration, in the saving of life on land and sea, in mine rescues and earthquake disasters and train wrecks and in pugilism. And when, at least in childhood, they rarely hear of any other ideal of courage than the physical one, they can scarcely get a true set of values. They can scarcely understand that moral courage, while different, is as fine as physical bravery.

MY PET ECONOMY

Would you care to pass on to some one else your pet economy? If so, address Pet Economy, Chicago Tribune.

A Shining Explanation.

Did you ever know any one who hoarded tin cans—those nuisances quickly discarded by most of us? Some months ago, if you had ventured into my friend's fruit cellar, you would have seen hundreds of such worthless articles. Upon inquisitive people asking, "Why?" she merely smiled serenely to herself in a knowing way.

Later summer came they embarked for their cottage as usual and I saw jammed and squeesed and pushed in the back seat and trunk and in every conceivable corner those nicely cleaned but raggedy tin cans! I wouldn't have been surprised had I seen some peeping out from under the engine hood.

I went up later to visit them and in the back of the cottage there stood a new storehouse with a shiny, shiny, new roof betraying their long kept secret. They explained that they had removed the top and bottom, unrolled the cylinder and used the flat pieces for shingles. J. O.

Renovates Wall Paper.

One of my pet economies is the mending and cleaning of wall paper. To remove grease spots I rub the spots with magnesia, allowing it to remain on for several hours. Sometimes it requires several applications before all trace of the grease disappears.

In mending torn or disfigured paper I tear a piece of paper containing the pattern to be restored, being careful to have the edge perfect on the right side. The paper must be torn, not cut. This I paste carefully over the broken paper, matching the figures. Unless the paper is badly faded it is difficult to find the mended place. M. E. P.

Utilizes Old Magazines.

My pet saving is making the most of all my old magazines, mostly women's publications, which are inexpensive in the first place. Here is a list of all the ways in which I use them:

Clip all recipes and household hints, using them for recipe scrapbooks and card cabinets, for shower gifts, Christmas presents, and my own use. Cut out all the paper dolls, mount them on standards and give sets of them to the children I know. I cut out the colored advertisements and paste in scrap-books for children's hospitals. And (I'm really proud of this one!) clip and send in all the advertisers' sample coupons for cold cream, tooth paste, recipe books, soaps, lotions, and so on. You'd be surprised what an enormous saving this amounts to. D. C. A.

Inexpensive Beauty Hint.

I purchased a 10 cent package of cornstarch, a 10 cent can of talcum powder with a rather strong rose odor, and 5 cents' worth of powdered boric. Run them through the flour sifter three times and you have a large supply of good body talc for after baths, etc. W. C.

Saves Ice and Fuel.

When a woman I know buys ice she covers it with a section of a newspaper. This makes the ice last longer. After the paper gets thoroughly wet, she divides it into parts and rolls each one tightly into a ball about the size of an orange. She places these in the sun and when they are perfectly dry stores them away in her shed to be used instead of wood for starting her fires in winter. D. E.

Neighbors Feed the Cow.

I have a neighbor who keeps a cow in town. Early in the season she asks all her neighbors and those who have gardens to let her have the cornstalks as soon as the corn is gone. She sends her son to cut the corn and then borrows a horse and wagon to go around and collect the fodder. In this way her cow costs little and she usually has the barn well filled for rough feed. L. H.

Slicker Pillows.

A worn out blue slicker raincoat made two practical and colorful porch pillows at practically no cost—a venture in front porch economy. The pillows were cut twenty-two inches square and a two inch fringe cut all around. Inside this fringe the pillow sides were sewed together and stuffed with last year's discarded pillow. One pillow was trimmed with modernistic triangles of yellow oilcloth sewed in odd designs over its surface. The other had bands of yellow oilcloth sewed in a square. W. S.

Biscuit Cutters.

Remove the bottom which holds the parts of an aluminum collapsible drinking cup together, and you'll have three biscuit cutters of graduated

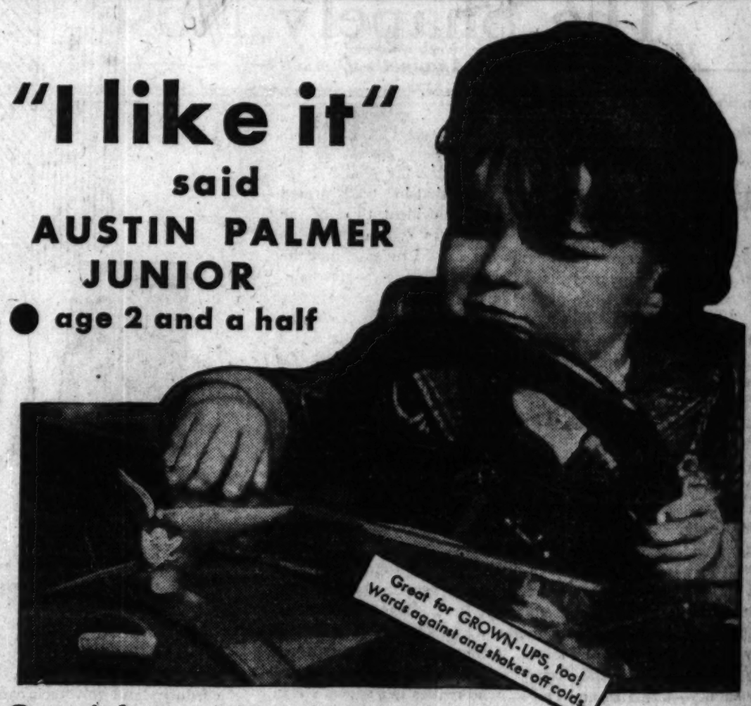
"I like it" said AUSTIN PALMER JUNIOR

● age 2 and a half



● and if your children hate cod-liver oil, here's good news for you

THINK of it!—cod-liver oil, the finest of health-builders, in a form that children don't mind taking. It almost sounds unbelievable. And yet. . .

We walked into Mrs. Palmer's back yard at 278 No. 4th Street, Newark, N. J. a few weeks ago, where her little son, pictured above, was having some windshield trouble.

We asked her if she'd be willing to let Austin try Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil. As she knows how hard it is to get children to take cod-liver oil, she consented gladly. She gave him a spoonful. Austin swallowed it. Then he licked his lips and smiled. . .

"I like it, mummy. It's good."

Pleasanter to take—
but that isn't all

Pale, thin, run-down children—they need cod-liver oil. Give it to them the pleasantest way—give them Scott's Emulsion.

Scott's Emulsion hasn't that strong "fishy" taste. It doesn't upset even delicate stomachs. It brings you purest, Norwegian cod-liver oil in its pleasantest form—a perfect emulsion. A form that makes it easier to take—easier to digest. Almost immediately, the body absorbs the health-giving vitamins—and the assimilation is complete. You get more good out of Scott's Emulsion and you feel the benefits quicker.

Scott's Emulsion is rich in vitamin A, the disease-resisting vitamin. It is rich in vitamin D, the sunshine vitamin that prevents rickets. It also contains vital mineral elements that aid in forming sound bones and teeth. This gives Scott's Emulsion a special advantage for growing children, infants, nursing and expectant mothers. Get Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil to-day, at your nearest druggist. Watch cheeks grow rosy. See youngsters gain new weight and pep.

Patterns and How to Use Them

By Clotilde

There Will Be Nothing Of the Home Made Look to Dresses Patterned from These Charming Designs.

AN interesting dress with up-to-the-minute details is shown in pattern No. 2665. The wrapped bodice at the front is softened by a swathed movement at the waistline and at the left side front of the skirt there is a plaited inset that gives a graceful fulness to the hem. The scalloped outline at the top of the plaits is a chic detail. The skirt at the back is circular and measures at the bottom, for size 36, about 2 yards.

The scarf neckline and the sleeves that suggest the leg-o'-mutton shaping, and the narrow belt across the back of the dress complete it.

The dress should be carefully basted together and tried on before doing any stitching. Of course the front scallops may be turned in and basted and stitched to the plaited inset first, but that is all. Follow the directions given with the pattern about the order of putting together, and you will find the work quite simple.

Contrasting materials may be used in this dress—the vestee, scarf collar and lower parts of sleeves, also the belt, may be made of the contrasting color. Either a patterned wool and silk mixture, with a plain contrasting color, or black Canton crêpe with white crêpe as the contrasting color would be smart.

Pattern No. 2678 is for a smart and practical bloomer dress for small girls of kindergarten age. The dress is cut in two parts, and after putting in the shoulder tucks on both the front and back, baste the seams together and try on. The neck at the front must be slashed, for that makes it easy to get into and out of. The slashed edges are bound and then the little applied band is basted in place, and stitched to position—leaving it free down the left edge. This is fastened in place with tiny snaps. The neck of the dress is finished with a round collar, and the bottom with a 3 inch hem. The sleeves are long and finished with turn back cuffs.

The seams of the bloomers are finished and upper and lower edge of the bloomers are turned under and stitched—forming casings for elastic. Avoid drawing these elastics too tight.

Any of the pretty cotton materials, such as broadcloth, dimity, gingham, or percale will be all right, or if you want a dress with a little warmth use wool challis—which launders as easily as cotton and is lightweight.

Velvet, moire, crêpe satin, flat silk crêpe, and wool crêpe are among the lovely materials that will make up beautifully by pattern No. 2669—depending largely on the uses the dress is to be put to.

The dress is a one piece affair with circular godets inserted in the skirt to give graceful flare and fullness. Through the waist of this smart frock there are pin inverted tucks that give a becoming molded line, while of same through the hips the dress is worth fitting.

The cowl neckline is quite new and becoming, and suits beautifully a dress of this design. Long, close fitting sleeves complete it.

The dress is left open between perforation on the left side, and finished for closing. This work must be accurately and perfectly done to prevent its showing. After the faced and extension hems are finished, sew the small snaps first to the faced hem, putting them three-quarters of an inch apart, and having the front edge one-eighth inch in from the edge. It shouldn't be difficult to sew the other half of the snaps in place.

In basting the godets in place, pin from the top towards the bottom on both seams—do the stitching in the same order.

Black silk crêpe, with turquoise blue is modish, and so is one of the new browns either with blue, shell pink, or an eggshell shade.

2665—Woman's dress. Sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, and 46 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 39 inch material with ⅞ yard of 35 inch contrasting.

2669—Woman's or miss' dress. Sizes 14, 16, 18, and 20 years, and 36, 38, 40, and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 39 inch material with ½ yard of 27 inch contrasting.

2678—Child's dress. Sizes 2, 4, and 6 years. Size 4 requires 1½ yards of 35 inch material with ⅝ yard of 35 inch contrasting and 2 yards of binding.

The Shapely Nose

By Antoinette Donnelly

Whether It's Grecian, Roman or Just Plain Snub, You Can Make It More Attractive by Paying Attention to the Complexion.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—Taking noses by and large, they seem to get by with the least censure of any feature in the whole anatomical list. This is true even in the face of latter day discontent when more women than you would suspect make surreptitious visits to or inquiries about plastic surgeons in whom they vest the hope of a new and more shapely organ for the center of their faces.

This group of women, however, is a minor one in comparison with the great body of improvement seekers among the sex. It's well, too, that it is so, for while I would not suggest that surgical assistance in reshaping noses is not being done and with success in some instances, still it is one of those operations, the happy outcome of which is dependent on rare surgical skill and some element of luck.

Unless one's nose is actually disfiguring, there should be no impetus to resort to the surgeon's knife for the very reason that the nose, if a little off shape, is not one of the liabilities held against one. In fact, some artists will tell you that slightly irregular features, including the nose, lend a little more interest to a face.

If a nose is actually deformed, as some surely are, it is time enough to worry about an operation and then it should be performed only by the most skilled surgeon obtainable. The fact that a nose is large, but not disproportionately so, is nothing against it. In fact, those interested in the psychological significance of the feature, attach character and individuality to the ess man's nose.

Watch the Complexion.

But improving the texture of the skin on the nose is something else. That's where you are supposed to rally to your nose's aid, for afflictions of the skin on this prominent feature are recognized by no one as assets. It is particularly apropos right now to take up this subject of the nose's skin. Where there is a condition of disorder, the cold, raw winds which heighten the color of the feature normally simply exaggerate the appearance of any other blemish that may be suffered. This is true, with blackheads, for instance, and enlarged pores. Ordinarily, they are unpleasant enough drawbacks, but when they are made doubly obvious by that high coral color which comes with the first cold breezes, they ought to be gone after in a sensible way of improvement.

Some noses are chronically red with out having the additional blemishes already noted. They are red the fall and winter through. They're red outdoors and they get redder when they enter a warm room, or when they are taken from one room to another with changes of temperature. They're red from excessive coffee drinking or after a hot, heavy meal is consumed. In addition, some noses have little red veins on their wings that are quite disfiguring.

Sluggish Circulation.

Now, this nose redness had better be taken up first because the remedy suggested for it will help, likewise, to rid the skin of its other blemishes. You can put down most of the red noses to sluggish circulation and to digestive disorders with the habitual drinking of hot, strong tea and coffee and stimulants of alcoholic trend.

If the symptoms of redness have been marked for some time I think it best to consult with a skin specialist for relief. He is the one who can name the internal disturbance and prescribe wisely for it. But if it is poor circulation, you can help yourself. It is not enough to apply hot and cold water directly to the nose, nor to apply stimulating preparations to whip up the circulation. You want to get the circulation stirred up all over the body.

The circulation of the body can be improved only with systematic exercise and with the cool, if not cold, shower, followed by the vigorous rub. In turn the exercise and shower rub will do much to relieve the skin on the nose of blackheads, greasiness, and enlarged pores.

Alternating hot and cold applications directly to the nose itself are extra measures of stirring sluggish blood to healthier action, often relieving the redness and congestion. Let the cold water be the final step, always, in this relief measure.

Helpful Steps.

The nose pitted with blackheads, no matter what its size, is a disfiguring feature, but a common enough epidemic for wide sympathy. That is, at one time or another almost every person suffers a spell of blackheads on the nose or on the side wings of the nose. Generally, when one is suffering from this discomfort there is a greasy condition, too. The treatment for blackheads will remedy the shininess at the same time.

There are the already mentioned helpful steps for improving the circulation generally by exercise and the cold shower and rub. Then, some local attention is prescribed. A small complexion brush for fairly vigorous scrubbing of the affected skin, and a fine soap or one of the soap substitutes especially prepared for blackhead ousting, are recommended, as is a rinsing off with warm water, and the final cold water application. After this, use a good astringent lotion to counteract the enlarged pores.

Correcting enlarged pores is no overnight process. We beg you to be patient and not to look for a correction in a week's time. A month's consistent morning and nightly treatment will see a great improvement, but no less time you can scarcely look for a finer grained skin.

The Man's Problem.

"Dear Miss Blake: I love my girl, but she has no money. Shall I marry her? FINANCIAL.

She's not supposed to have money—but she will expect you to have enough to give her a little home and be in a position to support her.

Use Your Wiles.

"Dear Miss Blake: I go out occasionally with a young man whom I like a lot. When I am with him he seems to care for me, but I am in doubt if he is or ever will be really in love with me. Please advise. "KITTY."

That depends largely upon how attractive and interesting you can make yourself with him, Kitty.

Undemonstrative Type.

"Dear Miss Blake: The one whom I love acts cold toward me when we are out with friends, but comes to my house often. What do you suggest? Shall I keep company with him? "JESSIE."

His may not be a demonstrative nature, but that doesn't mean he isn't fond of you, Jessie.

"Sauce for the Goose."

"Dear Miss Blake: My boy friend gave me a standup, so I went out with another fellow. Now he won't ask me to go out again. What should I do? K. A. C."

That Shiny Nose

of which you are ever conscious surely detracts from your natural beauty of face. You can stop nose shine at once by sprinkling a little Calonite powder on a wet cloth and rubbing it gently over your nose. It leaves the skin soft and smooth and removes all traces of excess oil which may have clogged the pores. Any druggist can supply you with Calonite powder. Two ounces is all you need.

A Mutual Confession

By Doris Blake

With the Result That the Husband Who Reserved Personal Freedom for Himself Decided That Even Temptation Should Be Denied His Wife.

"CONFESSING," as a woman pastime, under any circumstances, is not an indulgence universally recommended. You have to know your man before you tell. Which advice is of practically no value, since one does not really know her man until the telling is done. The surprising result of candor makes it a hazardous experiment, though one may be confessing only a temptation, as in the case of Mrs. A. C. W., who, no doubt, thought to ameliorate her husband's repentance with a little confession of her own.

Six years Mrs. A. C. W. was married. To refute a statement made by another correspondent in this column to the effect that husbands leave home because of wives' carelessness about personal appearances, Mrs. A. C. W. states that not one day in her married life has she been neglectful on that score, even to powdering and rouging faithfully for the gentleman's benefit.

"In addition, I did no slumping mentally, either," Mrs. A. C. W. protests. "I kept in touch with the topics of the day, read books and magazines, and could converse intelligently on almost any topic.

Satisfying Comradeship.

"I have all the faults of other women. We quarreled occasionally, and had the usual sweet reconciliations. Both of us have a sense of humor and so life was altogether pleasant and our comradeship satisfying. Then, after six happy years I discovered that my husband had a casual amorous relationship with another woman. It stunned and sickened me. I felt the world crashing down about my ears.

"After four months of intense mental suffering, we reached the point where we could speak honestly with each other. We discussed the situation coldly and sanely. I learned from him much that men keep hidden from women. He told me what I had only dimly suspected—that a man may love and respect his wife, yet fall into temptation through his urge for adventure and love for variety. He told me also that decent men do not regard male promiscuity with the same horror that decent women do. They have had a precedent for their conduct in the casual amatory contacts experienced from early manhood, and the habit, though quiescent, may spring to life again in a moment of boredom.

"These truths hurt me, but I was equally honest with him. I confessed that though loving him deeply, I had several times been attracted to others, but my respect for him, my own ideals and my sense of fair play had routed the temptation."

Now comes the ironic part. Mrs. A. C. W.'s honesty recolled upon her own head. "Even though faithful, the fact that I had been tempted was unforgivable in his eyes," she reports. Decent women, she was told, never waver from loyalty, even in their minds.

"I had almost usurped a male privilege. From that day forth, he lost faith in me. Our life now is pretty much a hell. Neither of us has faith in the other. Something has been killed that never can come to life again."

Out of the bitterness of her confessional experiments, Mrs. A. C. W. advises husbands: "Don't tell your wives." Wives, she warns not to let their husbands know that they, too, may be human and subject to temptation. Better, thinks our correspondent, to pose always as the plaster saint demanded by men. To wives and husbands goes the suggestion that in matrimony honesty may not be the best policy at all

The last suggestion might better be modified to read: "If brutal candor is indulged in only to shift a conscience burden onto the other person, then honesty is not a good policy. Silence were a better one."

Fault Peculiar to Men.

Men are peculiarly prone to shifting their conscience qualms onto the women they have married. It may be a tribute to woman that she is looked upon as so forgiving a soul, but the evidence that she is not a forgetting one is sufficient to warn men against the too ready confession. There are countless numbers of husbands who are paying for that moment of hasty confession and who will keep on paying as long as they are bound to the woman told. To be sure, not all women use the confession as a whiphand forever after, but many of them do.

But to get back to Mrs. A. C. W.'s predicament following her phantom lover disloyalty, the boasted sense of humor on which the couple thrived for six years surely must have met a death blow somewhere along the line. The humor of a man, himself a recent picture of unfaithfulness in the flesh, turning upon a poor spouse whose worst sin was to be tempted, is enough to make one laugh aloud. Surely no man can be quite that humorless.

Instability of Humor.

Humor, though, has a queer way of disappearing when it is most needed. In relations between men and women it is a disappointing prop more often than a saving one; that is, where relations are strained. It is not the laugh that saves situations nearly so often as it is the heart and courage and bigness of the soul behind the smile.

However, that is getting away from the confession theme and the advisability of its practice in domestic circles. Personally we feel that disclosures that are bound to make another unhappy were better kept behind sealed lips and the pains thereof borne alone. That goes for the wife who may have no more than a passing temptation to report as well as for the man who discloses his weaknesses to ears that would rather believe their owner's faith were justified. Nor is it fair for one man to alibi his vagrant moods or a promiscuous affairs on the ground that all men are equal, for in this respect they unquestionably are not, whatever may be said for their quality in other directions.

DREAMS COME TRUE?

Have you ever had a dream which later came true? If you care to see it in print address "Dreams," Chicago Tribune.

Brought Great Happiness.

A young doctor in our town was to be married. He had been engaged for three or four years, and at the last minute, even after the guests had assembled, he telephoned to say that he had changed his mind. No explanations were given and he left town.

Seeing him a few years later in another part of the country, he was asked what had happened. He said he has always been a great believer in dreams and, although he had always thought that he cared a great deal for his fiancée, the night before he was to be married he dreamed a girl came to him and that she was as real to him as an actual person. He said that she was by far the most beautiful and charming girl he had ever met and that he was sure she existed and that he would never be happy without her. Three weeks after his wedding had been called off he met this other girl. She looked and talked exactly like the one in his dream. They were married immediately and have been most happy. P. H.

Back from War.

My brother-in-law had been in France about a year when the armistice was signed. Naturally from then on, we all lived in eager anticipation of the day when he should return home. One week I dreamed three times in succession that he did come. The next morning after the third night's dream my sister received a telegram containing the wonderful news that her husband was on his way home. M. E. L.

Met Her Dream Acquaintance.

Living in London when I was a girl 20 years old, I dreamed that I was in a train traveling at a high rate of speed and that a young man [whose countenance I saw clearly] came and talked to me and told me his name was Harold and that he lived in Carlisle.

About six months after that my girl chum at a party, said, "O, L., I want you to meet Harold M., who has just come to London from Carlisle."

I looked up and there was my dream companion. He was considerably astonished when I told him I had previously made his acquaintance in a dream and said he had never been to London before. L. F. H

Directed Her Choice.

My mother was a believer in dreams, and during her long, happy, and not very eventful lifetime she had some remarkable experiences that were first suggested to her in her dreams.

When she was a young woman one of her dreams influenced her life in a beautiful way. At the time she had two suitors, sometimes loving one better, sometimes the other, and in this undecided way she allowed herself to become engaged to marry both. One night in a dream she thought she was crossing a stream on a log, when the log broke and she fell into the water. The suitor that came to her rescue and saved her from drowning was the one she later decided to marry, for she no longer had any doubt as to the "right" one. L. H. F.

A Nightmare.

About nine years ago in the office of the company for which I worked a young man was often "kidded" about his two former marriages and was told that his third marriage probably would be a success and a step to his happiness.

At this time I disliked the man very much and that conversation preyed on my mind so much that I dreamed that I was his third wife. Next morning I woke to laugh heartily over the dream because of hatred for the man. Today I find myself married to my dream man and to our great happiness. M. V.

A FRIEND IN NEED

By Sally Joy Brown

If You Can't Help Financially, Sally Will Be Glad to Have Your Old Clothing, Blankets and Other Articles to Give to Destitute Families.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in need and the friends in deed may be brought together. If you may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

WHILE the business of finding jobs for the fathers and mothers of families is meeting with such excellent cooperation from our readers and many families are on the road to reconstruction, we must bear in mind that there are still thousands on the jobless lists. The dependents of these erstwhile breadwinners must suffer, of course, since there is no income and the expense of existing continues.

Clothing wears out, food is consumed, fuel does not last, and with no money to replace these the unfortunate victims of this unemployment turn to you in their distress. Won't you do what you can to relieve their misery? It is not unlikely that you've felt the sting of this depression, too, and can not give relief in a financial form, but there must be other ways to help within your power. Discarded clothing which is still in fairly good condition but which you may no longer want can be put to good use. Blankets are needed. If you have some which are beginning to show wear they could be mended and patched to keep some poor family warm during the coming winter. Heating stoves are in great demand. And, since more and more of these are being replaced each year with installed heat, there may be a stove lying in your attic or basement unused.

You see there are ways to help even if you can't give a donation of money, and there are people who will benefit greatly by this help. Won't you gather together any clothing—for men, women, or children—which is no longer needed in your family? Write and tell me what you have, giving the sizes, and I'll be glad to find a family where the articles will be put to good use.

Chemistry Books for Some One.

"I have some chemistry books which should prove useful to some one. If you can tell me the name of some one who might be interested in having them, I'll be glad to donate them. P. P."

The chemistry student or the person interested in this intriguing science would enjoy these books I know. Write me, if you want them; please do not telephone.

Needs Suit of Clothes.

"I have been out of work for ten months and I have no clothing but an old pair of pants. I am trying to get a job in an office and I think I could find work if I had a decent suit to wear. I wear size 36, shirts size 13½, shoes size 6 or 6½. Can you help me get them? B. M."

Perhaps this young man's chances of obtaining work would improve if he were presentably clothed. Can you remove the difficulty by donating any clothing in this size which you may be ready to discard?

Wants Sewing Lessons.

"I would like to get in touch with some one who would be kind enough to help me with a few lessons in dressmaking. I am quite handy with the needle, but there are a number of things I should learn, as I intend to do dressmaking. MRS. A. M."

If you know a few things about the dressmaking art I am sure you could give Mrs. A. M. a few helpful pointers. She'll be grateful for any assistance given.

Donates Air Cushions.

"I have two air cushions for some invalid. They are in good condition, and if you will send me the address of people in need of them I'll be glad to mail them. MRS. A. A."

The invalid who is not able to move around a great deal will find these cushions a great comfort. If some one in your family will benefit by them, let me know by letter; please do not telephone.

The Biggest Liar

Who was the biggest liar you ever knew, and what yarn did he tell? If you want to see him in print address Biggest Liar editor, Chicago Sunday Tribune.

Employe's Platform.

The biggest liar I have ever known was a former employé of mine who had political ambitions. He didn't realize he was such a big liar, however. In telling me about his political intentions he outlined the speech he would make to his constituents:

"My friends and political enemies, I stand before you, an honest politician without gulle or ambitions, to tell you why I will fill this office well.

"I was a failure at farming because my tomatoes all went to seed in the top.

"I was a failure as a real estate agent because the houses I had to sell were so superior I bought them all myself.

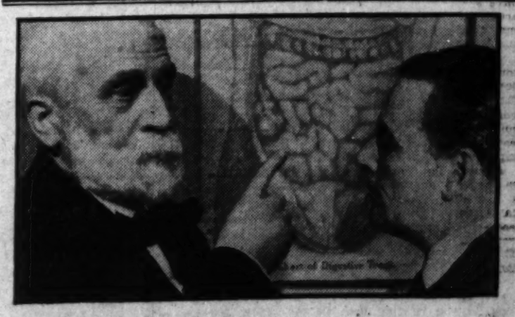
"I was a failure as a banker because I took my salary to make up all deficits, so that the people who deposited their money in my bank might get out more than they put in.

"I was a failure as a newspaper man because I hated to beat the opposing paper out of 'scoops,' so let it print the news first.

"As Abraham Lincoln was also a failure until he was President of the United States, I believe these failures have prepared me to serve you well in this position for which I am now declaring myself a candidate.

"Personally I don't want the job, but my friends have urged me to run because they need a man who will serve them well—and without pay—as I intend to do."

He didn't ever run for that office, but I sometimes wonder what would have happened if he had! E. E.



There May be Poison in YOUR Bowels!

STEP out tomorrow morning with the fresh buoyancy and briskness that comes from a clean intestinal tract. Syrup Pepsin—a doctor's prescription for the bowels—will help you do this. This compound of fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other mild ingredients will clean you out thoroughly—without griping, sickening or discomfort.

Poisons absorbed into the system from souring waste in the bowels cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The great difference it will make in your feelings over night will convince you of its merit.

Dr. Caldwell studied bowel troubles for forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the largest selling laxative in drugstores everywhere.

Diamonds in the Daytime

By Percy Marks

A Greasy Mechanic for a Husband Went Against the Grain of Cora's "Superior" Being; so She Left Him and Her Babies for Another Man—a Man Who Taught Her What It Meant to Be Regarded in the Light of Inferiority.

ILLUSTRATION BY R. F. JAMES.

"You're very kind and generous," Cora murmured, too shaken to say more. Then as Gordon and the children entered the room she suffered the last and fiercest blow.

CORA had prepared the announcement carefully, but now that the time had come she found she could not make it. She could think only of Gordon's constancy, his kindness, his patience, his perfect faith. In every way he had failed but in his love; in that he had never faltered, never for an instant wavered. They had had ten years of aching weariness together, ten long years of burdens and dinginess and poverty, and they had besides three white faced spiritless children. Now the children were in bed, and Gordon, free for the first time that day since seven o'clock in the morning, was looking sleepily through a newspaper. Soon, Cora knew, he would drag himself upstairs. She hoped the children would let him sleep tonight. It was so seldom that he wasn't roused by the baby's whimpering or Gordie's screams. She wondered why the boy had so many nightmares. It would be a shame if Gordon didn't get a good night's rest; he looked so tired. The announcement would have to wait. She simply could not tell him tonight that she was going to leave him.

She looked about the dusty, dim room, dusty even in the yellow light of an oil lamp, and shuddered. She wished she didn't feel so guilty; she wished Gordon were less faithful and kind. Her problem would be so much simpler if her reasons were positive instead of negative. How could she say that to a man who loved her so deeply? How could she explain to him that his failure to accomplish anything was as unbearable to a wife as a failure to try? If he hadn't tried, she might be able to believe that there was still power in him, but when he had tried beyond his strength, she was forced to admit his weakness.

Worst of all she felt that the mistake was primarily her own. She had known when she married Gordon that he was her intellectual inferior. She had had a college education and he had stopped with high school. True, circumstances had made college an impossibility for him. He had a widowed, invalid mother to support, and even high school had meant long hours of work after classes and bitter sacrifices of everything youth delights in. He had taken up his burden at 12 and never laid it down until his mother died when he was 24. He had married Cora a year later. Poor man, she thought; he had had a pitifully brief vacation.

She had fallen in love with his strength and his honesty and clean blondness and with his deep blue eyes, so very, very blue for one so fair; and she had fallen in love, too, then, she would admit it—with his humility.

He always had looked so clean, so scrubbed and fresh and wholesome. How long it had been since he had looked anything but faded and tired. His broad shoulders sagged as wearily as his unpressed trousers did. Physically and spiritually Gordon had gone limp.

Almost timorously she looked in the mirror which made the ugly sideboard useful. No she had not faded; her spirit and body were as brave and fresh as they ever were. She had kept herself young with books and lectures, with symphony concerts, even occasionally with a visit to the theater. Hours daily of giving piano lessons to the stupid brats of stupid immigrants had made her intellectual pleasures a possibility, but now she could have finer pleasures with some one who understood them. The pleasures would be finer because they would be shared. She was weary of returning from a symphony concert to find Gordon heavily asleep or patiently walking the floor with an ailing baby. She had come home tingling with beauty remembered, and the instant she opened the door, the beauty was slain.

Double Hatred

Yes, she decided, their life was summed up in the house. It had been built by Gordon's great-grandfather, and the great-grandfather had been somebody. The grandfather had been less, the father still less, and Gordon—well, Gordon had permitted the house to sag into its present dirty ugliness. The yard was overgrown with weeds and grass; the great elms were crowded by trees of lesser breed which had sprung up unnoticed, the paint had long since peeled from the walls and most of the blinds were gone.

Cora hated the house and hated her life in it. Housekeeping was drudgery to her, and though Gordon always shared the burden, it remained a burden. He did the washing Sunday morning but the ironing was hers to do on Monday; he scrubbed the floors when they were scrubbed and helped when he could with the dishes, but they were often unwashed or she washed and dried them alone. Most of all she hated the piano lessons. Her children kept her at home when Gordon was at work and so she could seek only pupils who would come to her. She was fortunate in the size of her class and some of the pupils were really gifted, but even the most gifted usually came to the lesson with dirty hands, and most of them sickened her with the same sour body odor that so offended her in her own children.

Her two boys and baby girl were her greatest disappointment. She never hesitated to admit that she wasn't cut out to be a mother or that the children loved Gordon far more than they did her, but he loved them devotedly and, try as she would, she could not love them. They were such colorless babies, all blonde like Gordon, all palely lifeless, the kind of children who seem always to have nose colds and no handkerchiefs. If she could see only their eyes, she sometimes thought, she could care more for them, because their eyes were wide and more deeply blue even than Gordon's, and their blueness sparkled when he came home. She would leave the children with him, and with a pang of shame, she admitted she would leave them with relief. They weren't children she was proud of.

She looked into the sideboard mirror and smiled dreamily. Her dark hair was soft as a cloud of smoke around her forehead, brown eyes were brilliant and her smooth cheeks were still as flushed with warm color as they had been when she was a bride. Her body was still slender. Childbearing had not distorted it. She had been beautiful; she was beautiful now. She sometimes thought her beauty and the children were Gordon's only happiness. True, he never knew what she had on, but whether she wore her newest gown or a soiled negligee, he thought her the loveliest of women.

She had never quite understood what Gordon's work was. He did something with electricity in a huge factory across the tracks in the west of the city. All she knew of the work was that it afforded a poor wage for a man with a family and that it kept the man smelly and black with grease. Once Gordon had spoken hopefully of a business of his own, but the hope had faded into a memory—if that; he never mentioned it any more.

She had been discontented usually, irritable sometimes, but until three months before she had never even thought of the possibility of escape.

Eric Coburn had frightened her at first. His fame awed her and his assurance disturbed her. A mutual acquaintance introduced them when they happened to be in a small book shop at the same time. She knew who Coburn was and had read in the Journal that he was in Providence gathering material for a life of Roger Williams. Biography was a new experience to him, he explained to Cora when she spoke admiringly of one of his novels, but he hoped to accomplish two tasks with one effort. In gathering material for the biography he would learn enough to write an historical novel about the Rhode Island Quakers.

He talked charmingly for fifteen minutes and left her thrilled and excited. She met him a second time by accident and he invited her to tea. From the first he confessed himself captured by her dark beauty. He was a widower, he said, and lonely, and he made the simple statement into an appeal. Small, dark, and nervous, he hardly looked the forty years he admitted, and his firm, quick speech suggested greater vitality than his slim body actually held. His aliveness fascinated Cora. To go from her dark, dingy house into his presence was like going from dead winter into living spring.

Something to Tell

His first proposal that she divorce Gordon and marry him shocked her into an immediate and instinctive refusal, but Eric was not a man to be dismissed with a single rejection. For six weeks Gordon's loyalty held her, but it could not hold her forever. Eric had too much to offer: his fame, the friendship of people more famous, freedom from drudgery and ugly poverty, travel, and most of all, his sensitive, flaming mind. Everything she wanted he had to give, especially himself. She did not capitulate until she was sure she loved him, until the man thrilled her more than his promises did; then she could resist no longer.

She finally told Gordon on a Sunday morning. Breakfast was over, the children were in the yard, and she and Gordon were reading the paper.

"Gordon," she began uneasily, "I have something to tell you."

"Yes," he said, laying down the sporting sheet. "What is it, Cora?" She looked into his honest, trusting blue eyes and lowered her own. It hurt so to hurt him.

"I don't know how to tell you, Gordon. You—you've been so good to me and—and tried so hard. I feel cruel. It——"

And then he helped her. It was like him to help her even when she was putting a knife into his heart. He would bare his chest and place the point, steady her hand—if necessary, make the very thrust himself.

"You want to tell me about Eric Coburn, don't you?" he asked gently, but his face was pale and his eyes dull with fear.

"Yes. Yes—how did you know, Gordon?"

"Lots of people have told me about how much you've been seeing him, and you didn't say anything. Are you—in love with him, Cora?" His voice was low and sad as he asked the question, but there was no criticism in it, no complaint, just a question.

Her head sank. She could not meet his gaze.

"Yes," she whispered. "He wants to marry me."

Gordon sat very still and said nothing. What he thought and felt at that moment she never knew. She knew, though, what he would say before he said it. Gordon being Gordon, could say nothing else.

"I shan't stand in your way," he said after a long pause. "I don't blame you, dear. You've had a hard life with me."

"O, don't be so kind!" she cried, looking at him, her eyes full of tears. "It makes it so hard."

"It is hard for both of us, but being mean won't make it easier." He hesitated and looked out of the window. "The children, Cora?"

"I couldn't take them from you. They've never loved me. You know that. I won't ask for them."

"That's all I wanted to know." Again there was silence. "I—I hope you aren't going to get a divorce here," he murmured at last.

"O, no!" Then rapidly, almost hysterically, she explained. She would go to Reno. Eric would bear the expense. She had made it very clear to him that she would not humiliate Gordon by asking for a divorce in Rhode Island; and she had told him, too, that she could not ask Gordon for money, not a penny. She told the plans in detail; white and quiet, Gordon listened. When she was done, he asked:

"You're leaving today?" For the first time in ten years she felt that a question from Gordon was a command. She hadn't planned to leave that day, hadn't thought of it, but she replied:

"Yes. I'll go to Boston—to Aunt Minnie—this afternoon."

"You'd better begin packing, then. I'll do the dishes."

Taken completely aback, she stared at him. For a moment she thought he was indifferent; then she saw that he was terribly moved and that his calmness was masking emotions so powerful that they shook his body and blanched his face.

"Yes—yes," she stuttered, "I'll pack," and she fled from the room. Alone, she wept. She had hurt him more even than she had thought she would.

On to Reno

By the time her packing was done he had apparent control of himself. He went to a corner drug store and telephoned for a cab, gave her what money he had and insisted that she take it, carried her suitcases downstairs and explained that he would express the trunk to Aunt Minnie's the next day. His face was ghastly in its whiteness; even his lips were white, and his blue eyes held only a blankness which was worse than tears or cries.

When the taxi arrived he did not call the children, and she dared not ask for them. He carried the suitcases to the cab and returned to her in the hall.

"Good-by, Cora," he said gravely. "I—I hope you're very happy."

She struggled with her tears. "O, Gordon!" she cried softly.

She telephoned to Eric from the station, and the topsy-turvy world almost righted itself when she saw him hurrying across the waiting room toward her. He understood her unhappiness, spoke admiringly of Gordon, and regretted that he had not been able to help her through the ordeal. He went with her to Boston, stayed there until she left for Reno, and cheered her with plans and love until the memory of Gordon's haunted eyes almost faded from her mind.

To her surprise, her stay in Reno proved delightful. She rested, relaxed. It was pleasant to live in a hotel, with no cares, no worries, no work. The divorce was acquired so easily, so quietly, that she was neither so ashamed nor so humiliated as she had expected to be, and when Eric met her in San Francisco and married her, she felt that her life had at last been fulfilled. Even the ten years of dingy living which she had endured were justified because they whetted her appetite for enjoyment of the present. Without them she felt she could never have fully realized her blessings.

For a time she heard from a few friends in Providence, but one by one they ceased to write. She knew that their silence was cold criticism and in a way she was glad. It was only right that Gordon should have the sympathy of the people among whom he lived, and her happiness was so complete and the critics so far away that their opinion mattered little.

She and Eric went to Hollywood. He had received an unexpected offer from the movies, and for a year he was far more affluent than he had ever been before. They had a suite in a hotel, Cora was permitted to buy beautiful clothes, and they met many of the people she had yearned to meet.

Little things occasionally disturbed her, but she passed them off as little. Gordon had seen nothing, which was irritating; Eric saw everything, which was sometimes humiliating. He was very particular about her clothes, very definite in his preferences, and actually unhappy if she wore a dress soiled with a single spot.

At first she thought he was hypercritical, but she soon realized that his severe standards were set for him, partly because he was an artist and partly because he loved her. He wanted her to be perfect, as he wanted his books to be perfect, and anything less was agony to him. He wanted to be as proud of her mind as he was of her beauty, and he was critical of her clothes and hair because only when they were exactly right could he find the loveliness he adored. His belief in the possibility of her attaining perfection was, of course, flattering, but his ambition for her wasn't comfortable.

He made her feel very ignorant, not because he paraded his knowledge but simply because he had it. She wasn't used to feeling humble. She had thought herself well read, but in comparison with Eric she knew nothing—and, worse, she knew that he knew she knew nothing. To Gordon her comments on music had been final; to Eric she soon dared not even to make them. He played the piano as she could never hope to play it, and before long she ceased entirely to play. He never said anything either in praise or in condemnation, but she could feel his distress.

"Please don't wear that dress," he would say. "It has spots on the blouse." Or, "Cora, please don't throw the newspaper on the floor," or, "Darling, I know I'm a particular old hen, but I hate to see powder spilled over everything, and you left your step-ins on the closet floor." It was remarkable how carefully and consistently he kept all trace of irritation out of his voice, but he was as relentless as he was patient and courteous.

She wasn't a very apt pupil, she was afraid, and she wasn't always as successful in hiding her irritation as he was. Once she flared at him: "You hold me to an impossible standard!"

He looked gravely at her and replied: "I hold you to no standard at all. It's just that I have a dream."

She could make no reply to that; she could never make a reply; she could only feel ashamed and ungrateful.

A Lucky Woman

So she felt in blue moments, but mostly she knew that she was a lucky woman and thanked God for her luck. When they went to Europe for a year on the proceeds of his labor in Hollywood, she felt thrice blest. Dreams which had seemed impossible were becoming realities. She learned a great deal in that year, but somehow she did not enjoy the learning as much as she had expected to. Eric took her ignorance of art for granted after their first visit to the Louvre, and she wasn't used to being considered ignorant.

She visited cathedrals with him, galleries, and museums in every city in Europe, and by the time they sailed from Naples she could understand the significance of the art he admired. She never ceased to resent his instruction, however, and was glad when Vesuvius was left behind and she had nine days of peace and relaxation ahead of her. She knew that Eric was pleased with her progress, that he was proud of her aptitude, but she resented the implication that progress was necessary and that the aptitude had to be discovered. She resented, too, the fact that the pictures they bought had always been Eric's choice. True, she liked all of them, but not one had been bought merely because she liked it. Eric had always asked her opinion, always apparently been willing to defer to it, but she dared not differ with his taste. That loss or sureness in her own taste galled.

They found an eight room house in Westchester county, furnished it, and at last settled down to a routine of living.

"Our roving and our riches are over for a while, I'm afraid," Eric said. "We'll have to live within my income now." The book on Roger Williams was selling well but the novel was still to be written and Eric's assured income was not large. It permitted a pleasant house charmingly furnished, adequate entertaining and entertainment, and a cook, but so far as the cook was concerned her duties existed only in the dining room and kitchen. She cooked, served the table, washed the dishes, but she would not move a dust cloth in the living room or make a bed. The care of the house was Cora's.

Eric was apologetic. "I'm sorry, dear," he said, "but I simply cannot afford a second maid."

Cora laughed. "After what I've done, the work here will be nothing," she said lightly. "No music lessons, no cooking, no dishwashing, no children's clothes to wash and iron, no scrubbing—nothing really hard. Don't worry, Eric; I shan't break under the strain."

Yet she came close to breaking. Eric worked at home and it was disturbing to feel him always present. "We live five years of married life in a year," she thought once, and was surprised to find the thought an unpleasant one. His presence in the house was like a domestic check rein holding her head up until both her body and spirit ached. And another time she thought, "I'd like one comfortable, completely sloppy day, entirely to myself. I'd be a pig just for contrast and relax and relax and relax."

She found housekeeping according to Eric's standards so burdensome that relaxation was impossible. Little enough was demanded of her but details constantly escaped her eye and attention. She meant to keep her clothes in the closets or drawers where they belonged, but Eric found them on chairs, on the floor or in the bathroom. He had his own bath and she wondered why he was so distressed if he saw a ring in her tub, but he was distressed and he never failed to see the ring. He saw everything; the dust outlining the spot where a book or magazine had lain, the newspaper that had been left in a chair, the lint on a rug which she had forgotten when using the vacuum cleaner, even a safety pin which apparently had crawled under her bed.

"I'm afraid I wasn't cut out for a housekeeper," she confessed at last. "I honestly do try, Eric, but I can't reach your standard. I think you must be the only really neat man in the world."

"Women like to think all men untidy," he replied quite calmly, "but they really haven't much with which to justify their attitude of superiority. There are only two places cleaner than most men's offices; one is an army barracks and the other is a ship—and men control and clean both."

"They aren't neat in their homes, though," she retorted, frankly unpleasant.

"Because they have a right to expect their wives to be," and the patience in his voice was a greater criticism than his words.

The Unexpected

She thought she tried and knew she failed. She was as uneasy in her house as she was in society. When they had company or went to a friend's house, Eric watched her unceasingly. He never apologized for her, never shamed her with a word or gesture of criticism, but she knew that he was on the qui vive to save her if she slipped in taste or tact. Twice he covered up slight errors so subtly that no one but she knew they had been made, but she hated him both for saving her and for seeing the need to. If he had mentioned the mistakes later, she could never have forgiven him, but he never alluded to them by so much as the vaguest hint. He recognized her sensitiveness, treasured it, guarded it for her, and she knew she ought to be grateful, but she could feel only resentment—and it grew until any reason for gratitude was entirely forgotten.

One afternoon she returned home from a visit to New York. They had been in the house for more than a year and she thought their routine thoroughly established; yet she knew the instant she opened the door that something unexpected had happened. What it was she could not determine, but the atmosphere of the house was different. Everything seemed to be in its accustomed place; nothing was new and nothing was gone, but for some unknown reason the house felt like a different house.

Wondering, she went upstairs to her own room. She stopped in the door, stared angrily an instant, and then went very white. Eric was bending over a chair, a dust cloth in his hand.

"What are you doing?" she asked coldly.

"Cleaning house."

Now she knew what the change was, and the explanation was worse than a contemptuous slap. She tried to save her pride even while knowing that it was gone.

"Was it necessary to do that?" she asked, making little effort to hide her rage.

"It was and has been for a week." Eric stood upright, looked straight into her shamed eyes, and said his say. "I'm accustomed to living in a clean house and I'm going to live in one if I have to do the cleaning myself. If you aren't cut out for a housekeeper, as you say, well and good; I'll do your job for you, but it must be done whether you do it or I do. I'm not hypercritical as you think, and I'm not exceptional either except in one way; I'll do the work myself if necessary and most men won't, but most of them want exactly what I want. You apparently have never had a proper standard of neatness and cleanliness. I've tried to give you one. Either you can't or won't accept it. I'm not going to try to any more. If the work isn't done, I'll do it; that's all."

Her whole body seemed to shrivel. She turned, fled downstairs, and fell sobbing on the davenport. If she could only have answered, offered some justification, her humiliation would have been less, but there was no answer; Eric as always was right. She knew what he thought and knew how true his thinking was. Never naturally neat, she had grown slovenly in her ten years with Gordon, and now the effort to correct her slovenliness was too much for her. She even liked disorder; she admitted it; she found it natural and pleasant. What a terrible change this second marriage had proved to be! It offered her everything but peace. Gordon had scrubbed the kitchen regularly and she had been pleased; now Eric dusted a chair and she felt pilloried. The situations were fundamentally alike, but how different the men were!

Eric never dusted another chair because there was no reason; he never found her clothes anywhere but where they belonged; the flowers were cared for, the tubs scrubbed, the soap dishes washed. Cora was the perfect housewife and she hated her perfection as she hated the strain with which she attained it. Each day she inspected her house with the rigorous care of an officer of the day inspecting a barracks kitchen, and if she found a thread on a rug, she snatched for it as fearfully as if it were a sin for which she must do penance.

To Providence

And as she worked she thought of Gordon. It was well over three years since she had seen him or her children, and while she polished a mahogany table which she had already polished, she remembered his easy going acceptance of everything she said or did. What she said or did had been right because she had said it or done it, and what she left undone, he ignored or took care of himself—uncritical, uncomplaining, only adoring and proud. To have some one proud of her again, to have some one look up to her, admit her superiority; to have some one feel that her taste was impeccable, her ideas unanswerable; to be loved for what she was, to be accepted as a beautiful creation, and not to be recreated; in short, to be the wife of Gordon Jamieson, that was all she asked. Even the dirt of the old Providence house had glamor for her now; it meant ease and relaxation. With Gordon she had had no standard to attain because she was the standard; with Eric she must always strive, strive, strive, until she thought her nerves would snap with the strain.

Gradually, unknowingly, she transformed her desire for Gordon into his need for her. She grew honestly ashamed of her abandonment of him and her children; she felt selfish, heartless and cold. It would be hard to go back to him, not because he would make it hard—O, Gordon would only make it beautiful, but the people they knew; how they would laugh and sneer! Well, let them laugh if they must and sneer, too; she must do what her conscience demanded, and if she had to suffer to right a wrong, perhaps the suffering was only just and meet.

She told Eric she would like to go to Boston to visit her aunt. "I want to see the children, too," she explained. "I'll stop off in Providence on my way back—if you don't mind."

"Of course not," he agreed quickly. "You must want terribly to see them, and I'm sure Jamieson will be willing. I'm glad you thought of going, Cora. You need a change. You've been looking very tired lately.

She stayed resolutely with Aunt Minnie for more than a week; then on a Sunday morning she took a train to Providence. Never had she dressed with such care. The suit she wore was more than a year old but it had been made in Paris and looked it. The style was still good. She wore her silver fox fur that Eric had bought for her in the Hollywood days and the diamond bar pin that had been his wedding present.

She almost passed the house before she recognized it. Gone were the bushes and seedling trees, gone the matted weeds and sagging blinds. Instead the elms stood alone in a smooth green lawn, lacy in their new spring

The Tribune Cook Book

By Meta Given

The Addition of a Little Cheese Will Change Many a Dish from the Prosaic to the Piquant.

ARE you helping to pull our cheese eating record up or down? As you know, we are not champion cheese eaters. Our annual consumption per capita is about the lowest of any of the civilized nations. We consume 4.14 pounds per capita per annum while the Swiss consume 23, the Dutch 13.5, the French 13.5, the Danes 13.2, the Germans 9.5, the British 9, and the Scandinavians 7 pounds. You who are interested in good nutrition and appreciate the value of cheese as a food naturally ask the question, "Has the inclusion of so much cheese in the Swiss diet been effective and is there any reason why Americans should eat more cheese?"

To answer this question satisfactorily is to refer to the history of these people, searching for their private and public performances. The Swiss are noted for their sturdiness and for their ability to wrest a good living from small stubborn patches of soil embedded in rock and ice. They have been the world's great strugglers and for generations have been famous fighters and protectors. An adequate proof of this is that many rulers entrusted their households and persons to the care of Swiss guards, famous in European history for their strength and trustworthiness. Much can also be said about the strong bodies of the Dutch, French, and Danes. For generations they have been daring mariners and skilful farmers.

So there seems to be some correlation between cheese consumption and racial strength and vigor.

An Economical Food.

Cheese is an economical concentrated food and no one who knows anything about foods doubts its nutritive value. These are sufficient reasons why we should eat cheese, but why don't we? When we make this inquiry there are two groups of folks who rise to answer. One who is and one who is not addicted to cheese.

The epicure replies that the reason we do not eat more cheese is that cheese is not what it used to be. We are "too blooming fast" these modern days to make good cheese. Complaint is made against the manufacturers who do not give their cheeses enough time to age. They are too anxious for the cash. As a result the young cheese that is sold doesn't have the pleasing intriguing flavor and is not so easy to digest as a perfectly ripened, fully aged cheese. To eat ripe cheese is to want more. And it is only with a properly aged product that one can form the cheese eating habit. Does the epicure's argument sound logical to you? To me it sounds expertly stout one, provided cheese is like apples, berries, or potatoes, in which ripeness is usually a very desirable quality.

But there is another side to this story. Those who have not grown to be cheese devotees, but are on their way, hold that our consumption is small because we haven't had the necessity to include it in our diet in an appetizing way. Here again I can speak from experience.

Cheese in Former Days.

My first acquaintance with cheese was when I was a slip of a girl riding the old family horse to the country postoffice and store. A purchasing list was always taken along—a memorandum of not only the necessities, but also of a few extra items that might be bought provided my basket of eggs would have more value than the family had anticipated. At that time money was not paid for produce, no matter what it was worth. One of the extras or luxury items on my list was: "Get a dime's worth of cheese and a nickel's worth of crackers." The storekeeper always cut me a slice cut from a big round drum and he kept but one variety from which to cut. Since I have learned a little more about varieties and qualities I am quite sure that first cheese was American cheddar and one of rather good quality.

This cheese that I bought served two purposes, one was to forestall hunger. It was a rather pleasant pastime to eat cheese and crackers as the faithful old horse jogged along the narrow rough road home. What cheese was left was used to bait the mousetraps. And this was about the limit of cheese uses in not only our own family but also in all the other families living in our community. The flavor, however, really did appeal to us. We were always ready to eat it every time it was bought, but we didn't increase our consumption and our interest in this excellent food until several years later. Never did we dream that this "store cheese" was a close relative of the cottage cheese we had been making and eating all of our lives.

The Swiss Family.

And I assume our information and interest in cheese would long have been delayed if it had not been for a Swiss family who moved into our community. This family made cheese from the milk of their own cows. Their method in the main resembled ours for making cottage cheese, but the product was similar to that which we had been buying, except their home product was made in smaller drums. They used sirup buckets with holes punched in the bottom for molds. And how they enjoyed that cheese! They ate it for the lunch that was served in the fields. They sliced it and put it on the table with summer sausage for a cold plate. The children took it to school. It was used in soup, in potato dishes, and with macaroni.

As a result of all this observation it wasn't long before we could see that this Swiss family had a variety of foods that we didn't have and that somewhat changed our attitude toward cheese. This same family also told us about Limburger, brick, Roquefort and Camembert cheese and how delicious they were. They also warned us about how some people objected to the odors of some of these cheeses, but they gave us assurance that they were wholesome and delightful once we learned to eat them.

When we did have the opportunity to eat the different varieties of cheese we were prepared to accept them as favorably as was humanly possible for unsophisticated individuals. It has taken time and considerable persistence on my part to learn to enjoy all kinds of cheese and I believe that one of the main difficulties was in not forming the habit early enough in life. And this belief has been strengthened recently.

Fondness for Cheese.

Only a few days ago I was visiting the great cheese producing area at New Glarus and Monroe in Green county, Wisconsin, to observe the interesting processes of making Limburger and Swiss cheese. In the Swiss cheese plant I happened to ask my guide how often he ate cheese. He said, "Three times a day and I always have Swiss and Limburger on my table." He told me that he eats Limburger cheese with jams and jellies on toast. And his 3 year old son, who thinks Limburger smells terrible, says, "It tastes awfully good."

On my tour of inspection I met a husky Swiss chap who looked the picture of health so I thought I would ask him how often he ate cheese. And he answered, "Five times a day and sometimes in between times when I am testing it." And again I asked, "How much do you eat each day?" and he said, "About one pound." About that time he invited us over to where he had a big drum of Swiss cheese cut. He sliced some and served us, then he ate a slice himself. There was no doubt about that man's liking for cheese. He ate it just as the most of us would eat candy or an apple.

The cheese makers in Monroe come from a long line of cheese producers. They are directly from Switzerland or their fathers or grandfathers are natives of that little Alpine country. All of them take great pride in making the best of cheese and they are making it just as they made it over in Europe.

Another helpful contact I made on this cheese excursion was with some of the wives of these cheese eaters. I was interested to know how they served it on their tables. I found that their method of serving it is similar to our own method, the main difference being that they are most particular about the quality and the quantity. They want the best and enough of it.

Flavor Determines Choice.

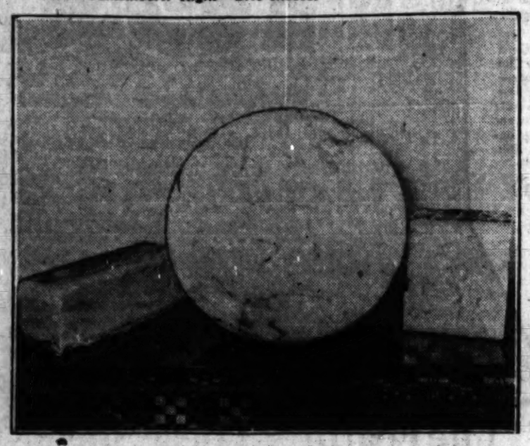
Invariably the man who consumes cheese regularly and consistently chooses cheese for flavor—one that results from ageing. And it is this quality you will remember that the epicure insists makes cheese enjoyable and easily digestible. An encouraging report made by these cheese makers is that each year cheese is staying in the curing rooms just a little longer. So if we can develop a little more appreciation of cheese perhaps the day is not far off when we will be having perfect cheese according to the standards of epicures. Another idea that I obtained was that Swiss people like more cheese in cooked foods than we do. For example, they like their macaroni and cheese half cheese, and they enjoy not only the cheese made in their native land, but all others of high quality.

And well might Americans emulate their examples. There is such a wonderful array of cheese on the market. All sizes, shapes, flavors, and odors greet us in the world of cheeses. Many people do not know many of the varieties and are unfamiliar with their distinctive characteristics.

To systematize this array into groups the broad physical characteristics are first considered. The most general classification is into hard and soft cheeses. Soft cheese is subdivided into unripened, such as cottage and cream cheese, and the ripened. Among the ripened we have those ripened by molds, such as Camembert, and those ripened by bacteria, such as Limburger and Brie.

Classifications.

The hard group is subdivided into semi-hards and very hards. The semi-hards sport a division between mold ripened and bacteria ripened with Gorgonzola, Roquefort, and Stilton in the first group and brick and Munster in the second. The presence or absence of holes subdivides the very hard. Swiss and Parmesan are typical of the former and Cheddar, Edam and Gouda of the latter. From this we can next proceed to get acquainted with the more prominent individuals of the family and see what their distinctive characteristics are.



Left—Loaf cheese (American). Center—American cheddar. Right—Swiss cheese. Note the "eyes," internal gas bubbles, that make Swiss cheese so attractive for the table.

Brick is smooth textured, medium hard; flavor midway between Cheddar and Limburger and is bacteria ripened for two months.

Brie [French] is soft, full flavor resembling Camembert and bacteria ripened from three to five weeks.

Camembert is soft with thin soft rind; full flavor often ammoniacal and mold ripened from six to nine weeks.

Cheddar is smooth textured, hard yellow to reddish color; mild flavor and bacteria and enzyme ripened for a few weeks to six months.

Cottage has pasty texture, white with mild sour flavor and is unripened.

Cream is the same as cottage but richer in fat and is unripened.

Edam has a hard rubbery texture, a flavor more nutlike than Cheddar; made in red cannon balls. It is bacteria ripened for one month.

Gorgonzola is hard streaked or mottled; has a mixed spicy and "dry cheese" flavor. It is mold ripened from a few weeks to one year.

Gouda is a South Holland variant of Edam.

Limburger is soft with a firm rind, full rich flavor and is bacteria ripened from one to two months.

Munster is a semi-hard, loaf shaped; has a flavor between brick and Limburger and is bacteria ripened two to three months.

Neufchatel [domestic] has a pasty smooth texture, is white with mild rich flavor and is unripened.

Parmesan is hard with sharp flavor; usually grated for seasoning. It is bacteria and enzyme ripened for a year or more.

Port du Salut [Oka-Trappist] is semi-hard with rubbery texture and flavor between Cheddar and Limburger. It is bacteria ripened for five or six weeks.

Stilton is semi-hard, has a white body streaked with blue mold; mixed spicy and dry cheese flavor. It is mold ripened for two months.

Swiss [Emmenthaler] is hard with gas holes; has a nutlike, mildly sweetish salt flavor. It is bacteria ripened from three to six months in the United States and from six to ten months in Switzerland.

Pineapple cheese is nothing but Cheddar cheese which has been cooked much harder than ordinary and after pressing is dipped in warm water for a few minutes and then hung up to dry and ripen in a closed, meshed net. The net gives the corrugations and pineapple shape. It is supposed to have originated in Connecticut.

Made Wholly from Milk.

The American people have not taken full advantage of the possibilities of cheese as a food, healthful and economical. Cheese is made wholly from milk and provides in a concentrated form the nutrients of the most perfect food we have. Because of concentration the fuel value is high, the protein content is adequate as the sole source of protein in the diet. Calcium, phosphorus and iron are present in the rennet cheese in the same proportion as in milk. Vitamins A and D fat soluble are retained concentrated in the cheese.

Cottage cheese made from skimmed milk is only slightly different. A little calcium is lost in the curdling process. While some of the vitamins are lost when the milk is skimmed these are replaced when cream is added when the cheese is made ready for sale.

One-half pound of good Cheddar cheese will provide an adult with all the protein he needs for one day. It also fulfills the daily requirement of calcium and phosphorus as well as one-fourth of the iron requirement. This amount will also supply more than 1,000 calories. Experiments have proven that cheese is highly digestible—90 to 99 per cent—and is economical.

Understanding the value of cheese as a food we should take full advantage of it. Low cost dietaries may be rounded out by the generous use of cheese in any of the interesting and appetizing ways that we find.

Try eating cheese in different ways. The following recipes have been suggested by a good Swiss housewife living in Wisconsin. These recipes are souvenirs of cheese day, a famous celebration held every five years in the cheese producing region of Wisconsin.

CHEESE AND VEGETABLE SOUP.

2 tbsp. finely chopped carrots.
1 tsp. chopped onion.
2 tbsp. butter.
2 cups meat stock.
1 cup scalded milk.
2 tbsp. flour.
¼ lb. cheese [grated].
Salt, pepper, and paprika.

Cook vegetables in one-half of the butter for a few minutes, add the stock and simmer for 15 to 20 minutes. Make a sauce by using remaining butter, flour, seasonings, scalded milk and add to the vegetables. Just before serving stir in the cheese and cook slowly, stirring until it is melted.

NUT AND CHEESE ROAST.

2 tbsp. chopped onions.
1 tbsp. butter.
1 cup grated cheese.
1 cup chopped English walnuts.
1 cup bread crumbs.
Juice of ½ lemon.
Salt and pepper.

Cook onion in butter and a little water until tender. Mix other ingredients and moisten with water in which onion has been cooked. Put into shallow baking dish and brown in oven.

WELSH RAREBIT.

1 tbsp. butter.
1 tsp. cornstarch.
¼ cup milk.
½ lb. cheese—rub through grater.
2 eggs well beaten.
½ tsp. each of salt, mustard, and paprika.
Few grains cayenne pepper.

Melt butter, add cornstarch and milk gradually. Cook, stirring until thick and smooth. Add cheese and stir until melted. Remove from fire and stir in the well beaten eggs. Season and serve at once on crackers or toasted slices of bread.

POTATOES AU GRATIN.

Cream potatoes. Put alternate layers of bread crumbs, creamed potatoes and grated cheese in buttered baking dish; cover with bread crumbs and bake in oven until golden brown.

CHEESE AND SPINACH ROLL.

2 qts. spinach.
1 cup grated cheese.
1 tbsp. butter.
Salt.
Bread crumbs.
2 eggs, beaten.

Cook spinach in a small amount of water in an open kettle for 10 minutes. Drain, add butter, then chop. Add cheese, eggs, and enough bread crumbs to make a mixture sufficiently stiff to form in a roll. Bake in a moderate oven. Any leftover vegetable may be substituted for spinach in the above recipe.

POTATO CHEESE PUFF.

¼ cup milk.
¼ lb. grated cheese.
3 cups hot mashed potatoes.
2 eggs.
Salt, pepper, and paprika to taste.

Heat milk in a double boiler, add cheese and beat until smooth; then add to the mashed potatoes. Season the mixture and add the egg yolks, which have been beaten lightly. Last of all fold in the stiffly beaten whites of eggs and pour the mixture into a buttered baking dish. Place in a hot oven and bake until firm and brown.

CHEESE DREAMS.

Put thin slices of cheese between buttered slices of bread. Brown the sandwich on both sides in a frying pan containing butter, or butter the top and bottom of the sandwich and brown in the broiler. The cheese should melt between the slices of toast.

RUSSIAN SANDWICHES.

Mash or grate any cheese, add chopped stuffed olives and chopped nuts. Moisten with a salad dressing. Spread between buttered thin slices of bread.

Diamonds in the Daytime

By Percy Marks

foliage. The house was gleaming white, the blinds a gay green, and the windows shone. Daffodils waved their yellow chalices in neat plots and a few tulips were open.

Startled and confused, she stared at the transformed house for minutes before the explanation occurred to her. At last she understood. "He's had to sell the house," she thought pityingly. She hesitated, thought of looking for his address in a telephone book, and then remembering that he had never been able to afford a telephone, decided to ask the new owners if they knew where he could be found.

She lifted the gleaming brass knocker, let it fall and waited. The door opened, and taken completely by surprise, she exclaimed in blank astonishment, "Gordon!"

It was Gordon, but Gordon changed, Gordon young again. He had been thirty-five when she left him and looked ten years older; now he was nearly thirty-nine and looked less than thirty. And he was clean, beautifully, immaculately clean. His flannel trousers were creamy white and perfectly pressed his shirt was as white as a good laundry could make it, and his powder blue sweater jacket was innocent of a spot. His eyes had never seemed bluer, his skin fresher; he was slender and healthy and strong; he was Gordon as she had first known him.

"Why, Cora," he said, in his turn surprised and startled.

"I was—I'm on my way to New York—from Boston, you know," she explained haltingly, "and I stopped. I thought—I wanted to see the children. I know I ought to have written but——"

Her face was flushed with confusion and he hastened to put her at ease. "O, that's all right," he interrupted generously. "Of course you can see them. They're at Sunday school now, but they'll soon be home. Please come in."

A Transformation

Her embarrassment seemed to give him complete confidence. He opened the door wider and she saw into the hall. A gate-legged table held a blue bowl of jonquils; over it was a framed sampler. Before her the stairway swept upward, its shiny mahogany handrail emphasizing the splendid curve, the balusters gleaming with white paint. He stepped back to let her pass into the living room. Hooked rugs were beneath her feet and a miracle before her eyes. Everything was impossible; the sunshine reflected in the mahogany furniture, the chints covered easy chair, and the utter sweet smelling cleanliness of everything. She recognized most of the furniture. It had been in the house when she came to it; the great-grandfather had bought nearly every table and chair, and now, mended and polished, they proved his taste. She could see into the dining room. The ugly old set was gone. In its place stood a table and buffet which she knew Eric would have admired. The oil lamps were gone, too; electricity had at last taken their place. Strangely enough, a grand piano seemed the least miracle of all. In comparison with the transformed house and the rejuvenated Gordon, it was as nothing.

She struggled for poise and found a little.

"You know I'm astonished, Gordon," she said. "The change is wonderful. The house is beautiful, and you look like a boy."

Gordon smiled. He was pleased with her praise, but she felt that he wasn't as impressed by it as he once would have been.

"I've often wanted you to see the house," he said. "I'm proud of it now."

"You have a right to be." She was saying the right thing; she knew she was, and yet—and yet—Gordon didn't react to what she said as he should. She forgot the house and looked at him. He had no nerves, like Eric; he was calm and gentle and strong—yes, and handsome, as handsome as he had ever been.

"Will you tell me," she asked, almost humble, "how you did it?"

"Of course." He paused as if ordering his thoughts, and then explained. He was comfortable in the big chints covered chair, at home in it, but Cora didn't feel at home on the davenport. "I was pretty badly upset the day you went away," he began. "At first I just couldn't think, but I had to get lunch for the children, and doing things helped, you know. Then I realized that there was no one to take care of them the next day. I didn't know what to do. I thought and thought; then I remembered Carl Schultz. He worked down at the plant and I remembered he'd told me his mother was looking for work. I hunted her up. She looked clean and motherly and she was used to children. She's been here ever since. She's out in the kitchen now."

"That was all right, but I didn't see how I was going to pay for everything. There'd been barely enough with what I'd earned, and now I had Mrs. Schultz' wages to figure on. Well, I was sort of dazed for a week or two and then I woke up. I had to. I had to do something and do it right way. You remember I'd always wanted to go in business for myself. Well, I did. I mortgaged the house for capital and managed to get a radio agency. I hit it just right. Everybody'd gone crazy over radio just then and everybody had money. Before I even opened the shop I canvassed the plant, and you know about a thousand people work there. I had a lot of orders before I started."

He paused and smiled happily. "Things certainly broke right for me. I didn't have to use half the mortgage money because money began to come in so soon, and I'd paid off the mortgage in less than a year. Business just boomed and it's been good ever since, but you can bet I gave the best service in Providence—and that helped. I knew radio couldn't keep up—I mean the way it was going, and so I put in electrical appliances and fixtures, and now I've even got stoves. I had Carl Schultz working for me from the first, and now I've got three men and a girl." Again he paused; then added slowly, "You sort of kicked me into success, Cora."

Another Woman

The last statement was innocently made and sounded innocent, but to Cora it was a whip of scorpions. It was exactly as if he had said, "I couldn't succeed until I had got rid of you."

Confused, baffled, even in a way disappointed, she managed to speak naturally and to congratulate him. "You must have done wonderfully and I'm very glad. You worked so hard for such a long time. And you've done marvels, just marvels, with the house. It's lovely—perfect."

"O, the house!" he exclaimed. "Don't give me credit for that. That's Estelle's work."

"Estelle?" A cold fear touched her, a dreadful premonition.

"Yes, sure, Estelle. You look so surprised, Cora. Didn't you know I'd got married again?"

She shook her head in confused denial as her world turned upside down and scattered her lovely dreams like shriveled petals at her feet. "No," she murmured, "no, I hadn't heard."

"Why, I've been married a year and a half now. It's Estelle Kingsley."

Estelle Kingsley! Astonishment, like a sharp blade, pierced Cora's confusion only to leave her more confused. Estelle Kingsley. How well she knew who she was; every one in Providence knew who Estelle Kingsley was. She had gone to Bryn Mawr and then to Munich for two years to study with a famous musician. She returned to Providence, announced calmly that she could never be a really great pianist, and settled down to give lessons was a success equaled only by her serene acceptance of her fate. She held a position, socially and musically, which Cora once had envied. How could she have ever chosen Gordon?

"How did you ever meet her?" she asked, humiliation destroying her tact.

If Gordon caught the derogatory implication in her question he gave no sign. "I've known her always," he explained quietly. "We went to the same school." Once more he smiled. "Estelle says she made up her mind in grammar school to marry me, but that you fooled her while she was in Europe. She says I didn't have a chance as soon as she knew I was a bachelor again. I thought I did most of it, but she says I just said, 'I do' when she told me to."

The grand piano was explained; everything was explained, except a change which remained inexplicable. Nervously she left the davenport, went to the piano and leafed the music. All of it was far beyond her. Some of it was beyond even Eric.

"Does Estelle play this sort of thing to you?" she asked, striving instinctively for her old supremacy. The question was not kind; she did not mean it should be. It was a weapon to ward off the last blow, and it was a thrust of revenge for the pain she was enduring.

Gordon's serenity was unshakable. Again that happy smile lighted his eyes. "Yes, and I like it. I even like Brahms. Sometimes I almost think I like Stravinsky." The smile faded and with it his friendliness. "Cora," he asked, his voice level and significant, "why didn't you ever take me with you to symphony?"

"Why," she retorted, "it never entered my head it would mean anything to you."

"I love it."

He did not lift his voice; there was no bitterness in his tone, but somehow he conveyed all he meant to Cora and she understood. It was as if he had said, "You took my inferiority for granted and carefully kept me inferior. I was just food to your ego. I was a failure because it was necessary to you that I should be one. You robbed me of pleasure and success so that you could fatten on my humility."

Children's Voices

Later she wondered if he had really meant what she thought he meant. She couldn't believe he did, and yet those sentences had formed as clearly in her mind as if he had said them. Many times she tried to persuade herself that she had only imagined the bitter condemnation, but there had been something in his manner, in his eyes, which made persuasion impossible.

Steps sounded on the porch. There were children's voices. The front door opened and Gordon leaped to his feet.

"There's Estelle and the children now" he said hastily. "Excuse me a minute, please." He hurried into the hall.

From where she stood Cora could see in a mirror the meeting between him and Estelle. It was brief. He kissed her and whispered in her ear. She whispered a question and he nodded. Cora could never forget that moment's reflected scene, the perfect intimacy of it, Gordon's sureness and pride, Estelle's utter adoration. When Estelle looked at Gordon, Cora understood too much, and what she understood was incredible. Estelle was humbly proud of her husband—of Gordon!

Estelle came into the room. She was a plump woman in her early thirties, not pretty, but radiant with vitality and happiness.

"I'm glad you came, Mrs. Coburn," she said quietly. "I don't want the children to forget you." She did not offer her hand, but she was neither cold nor distant. "They call me mother, but I don't want them to suffer the shock some day of discovering that I'm really not their mother."

"You're very kind and generous," Cora murmured, too shaken to say more. Then as Gordon and the children entered the room she suffered the last and fiercest blow.

They were beautiful, the kind of children she adored. Their eyes were bluer even than she remembered, their cheeks round and rosy, their curly, well brushed hair shining with golden lights. They stared at her and something cruel caught her heart and crushed it. Her eyes filled with tears. Her babies!

Somehow she managed to say, "They're so changed. I—I can't believe it."

Gordon and Estelle exchanged a significant glance, and Cora understood its significance as clearly as if they had said, "All they needed was proper care and food."

The children stared; she could not speak: the silence grew unbearable.

Gordon broke it by saying to the oldest boy, "You remember your mother, don't you, Gordie?"

"Yes," the boy replied, but made no move toward Cora. His searching hand found Estelle's skirt and clutched it.

Cora wanted to take each child in her arms, all of them at once; she wanted to fondle them, kiss them, call them her own—and she dared not move, dared not touch them, dared not even speak their names.

Finally Coralie, the youngest, could bear the strain of the silence no longer. She lifted her blue eyes, bright with hostility, and stared at the stranger. "Go 'way," she said; "go 'way!"

"Coralie!" Estelle exclaimed reprovingly, but Cora lifted her hand to stay the reproof. "Don't, please," she said, her voice flat with weariness. "She doesn't know me—and she's right. I shouldn't have come. I won't again." She picked up the silver fox fur from the davenport where she had dropped it. "I'm sorry to have—I mean—well, never mind; you understand." She managed a smile. "I'm glad to find Gordon so successful and happy and the children with such a good mother."

"Thanks, Cora," Gordon said. "You are very generous. Shall I call a taxi?"

"No, thanks; I'll walk."

She looked again at the children, looked long and hard, memorizing the picture they made so that it would never fade from her mind.

"Good-by, Gordon," she said bravely; "good-by, Mrs. Jamieson; good-by, Gordie and Robert and Coralie; good-by." Her voice caught and she closed her eyes to hold back the tears.

"Good-by," they all said at once, the children's voices suddenly clear and strong.

Nothing the Matter

Cora never quite remembered how she reached the station or passed the time until the train left. She did send a telegram to Eric, but that act was the only one she was ever sure of. Nothing remained of the four hours' ride, either; it was only a chaos of emotion.

It was suddenly and surprisingly good to see Eric waiting for her when she reached New York; he at least was real, not a confused nightmare.

He kissed her and said, "We'll have to hurry. We can just catch a train home."

Saying nothing, they walked rapidly down the stairs to the lower level, across the waiting room, through the gates, and down the long incline.

"You look tired," Eric said when they were seated. "Did you have a hard trip?"

"Not very, but I've had a long day. I stopped in Providence to see the children and that upset me."

"Of course," he agreed sympathetically. "It was bound to."

As the train rumbled under Park avenue they were silent, but when they had passed 125th street Eric spoke again.

"I suppose," he said, "you've been dressed just this way all day."

"Of course," she replied. "I hardly could change. Why, is anything the matter?"

"O, no, not really. You look very nice, really beautiful, but I do wish, dear, that you wouldn't wear diamonds in the daytime."

An angry retort rose to Cora's lips, but she did not speak it. Instead she unfastened the bar pin and dropped it silently into her bag.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

DO you know that just beneath that soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon? Nature causes the normal skin to peel off in tiny, unseen, flour-like particles, a little each day, renewing the complexion of youth naturally, but there comes a time when this skin shedding slows up. Worry, overwork, sickness, inactivity are reasons that cause the face to be blotchy, discolored, pimply and old looking. The thing to do, if you wish to look your prettiest at all times, is to assist nature in the process of absorption by using pure Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce at any drug store or beauty counter and use as directed. It gently but surely peels away the outer scarf skin, removing freckles, pimples, blackheads or a muddy complexion. The underneath skin, now in evidence, is clear, pink, fresh and velvety, and the entire face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. To quickly remove wrinkles and other age lines we recommend a face lotion of unusual merit. One ounce powdered saxolite and one-half pint witch hazel.

An embroidered initial on your own lingerie or household linen or on any piece you are making as a gift, adds much to the beauty of the article.

A flower alphabet is one of the prettiest to use, and need not be more difficult to do than plainer letters. Use tracing paper to transfer the letters to the material, taking care to have the material smooth and the paper fastened so it won't move.

The raised satin stitch is the best for these letters, using the outline stitch where there are single lines. For the tiny flowers, outline, seed and satin stitches may be used.

The first step in the work is to use a small running stitch, marking all outlines. These stitches must follow the shape of the letter perfectly, not going off the line even a fraction of an inch.

The next step is the padding, and this is done by using a couple of strands of embroidery floss or darning cotton, and taking running or chain stitches, keeping them short on the under side. The filling should always be heavier in the center of the space, thinning down as the outlines are reached.

Stitches are always taken at right angles to the edge in the satin stitch, making an even over-and-over stitch. Frame is always used for this work, as it is a task that must be done only to be perfect. Where there are arcs the stitches have to be taken unusually close together on the inside and on the outer edge there must be no spaces, but they must just come together. On the inside they must never lap.

The outline stitch is one of the easiest to do and may be made to follow any direction desired. Start at one end of a line and take a short backstitch. Throw the thread to the left of the needle and bring the needle out to the right of the thread and just touching the stitch you started with. Continue in this way, keeping the stitches the same length, except where a curved one is used, and in that event the stitch will have to be still shorter.

The seed stitch consists of rows of small backstitches a short distance apart, the stitches of each row being taken in between instead of opposite those in the previous row.

Going for a Walk

By Eleanor Jewett.

Daddy on Sunday says: "Come for a walk,"
And you'd think that he meant to take me,
But when we get started he always forgets
The way that a walk ought to be.
He tries to go calling at grandmother's house,
Which is nice, but not really a walk.
Or he turns to meet friends on the corner and then,
They talk and they talk and they talk.
He forgets there's a park and a beautiful zoo
With bears I can feed with a bun.
He makes I take daddy out walking with me
It isn't so very much fun.

Bright Sayings

Please address all bright sayings of children to Aunty Bee, The Tribune.

Jane, 4 years old, had gone with her mother to spend the day at a cottage near a lake. She had been warned by her mother not to touch any of the vines which grew close by for fear they might be poison ivy.

Later on her daddy came and little Jane said, "Daddy, don't touch any of those leaves; they might be Polish Irish."

Mrs. C. S.

Five year old Jimmy, in the midst of an exhibition on his new bicycle, went on to the curb with a jar, his head striking the walk. The blow caused a nasty looking bump and Jimmy, manfully keeping from tears, ran to the mirror to view his injury.

Upon perceiving the protuberance caused by the blow, he ejaculated with horror, "Aunty, you don't think I'm starting to grow horns, do you?"

Butter the bread and spread a thin layer of any soft cheese before cutting from the slice. Then roll the slice, which has been buttered and cheese coated; fasten the roll with a thin strip of bacon and secure the bacon with wooden toothpicks. Place on broiler below low flame and toast very slowly. Turn once to brown on both sides and thoroughly cook the bacon.

John Vanderlyn's Adventure

by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

What Has Gone Before:

JOHN VANDERLYN, a young American, is visiting at the villa of the Marchesa Trescobaldi, near Monte Carlo. The marchesa takes her guests, Col. Bruce, Joan Peveral, an English girl, and John, to an Arabian fortune teller down in the town. The Arab tells Vanderlyn that he is going to have an adventure with death and that he will not return to America until after he is married and his wife has borne him three children. John is skeptical, although he was impressed by the seer's first performance, which consisted of making each of the party relive an event of his or her past life. They drive back toward the marchesa's villa. On the road they come upon and rescue two women, victims of an auto wreck. The younger of the two is a Russian, named Dina Hitrowo, and the other is her aunt, the Countess Gregorovitch. Vanderlyn is greatly attracted to the girl, but she leaves without bidding him good-by. He goes to Monte Carlo in search of his lost passport, but fails to find it. He sees the girl playing roulette in the casino, and invites her and her aunt to have dinner with him.

INSTALLMENT V.

The Thieves' Kitchen.

JOHN, Dina, and the countess walked through the passage out on to the now lighted up square. And as they walked up through the great garden studded with high palm trees, Vanderlyn now and then caught a strange look in the eyes of a foreign passerby. He grew hot and cold with indignation. It was all too clear what some of those men, aye, and women, too, thought of the trio. No one, looking at his two companions, could have told who they were or what they were, excepting that the girl was very attractive looking. As for him, he looked what he was—a prosperous, carefree stranger, no doubt visiting Monte Carlo for the first time in his life, and so eager for adventure.

John Vanderlyn would have been surprised, even indignant, had any candid friend told him that this was exactly what he was.

Yet Vanderlyn would have admitted at any rate to himself, that this fortuitous meeting was something of a real adventure. All thought of his lost passport was completely forgotten. And, had he thought of it, he would have blessed the chance which had brought him over to Monte Carlo today.

He felt consumed with a burning curiosity not only with regard to Dina Hitrowo but with regard to her aunt, Countess Gregorovitch, also. And as the three walked in the darkening twilight round The Cheese he again looked at her and tried to take his measure of her.

She was a tall, dark, elderly woman, with high cheekbones, and possessed of what it is the fashion to call an aristocratic profile. She wore a dress which he realised was made in a very old fashioned way, for it was of black silk, had a curved in bodice, and the wide, flapping skirt only just cleared the ground.

As they hastened along the sanded path the countess addressed no word to the American who was about to entertain her. Now and again she murmured something in Russian to her niece, and when the three reached the top of the curiously shaped public garden there began between the younger and the older woman an eager, sharp discussion, of which Vanderlyn, to his discomfort, understood every word, for in his boyhood, while in Germany, he had learned Russian.

Dina Hitrowo was trying to persuade her aunt to go to some different restaurant from that to which she wished to go. "Why take him there? What is the object of doing such a thing?" she asked. And then the countess said sharply, "There are several quite good reasons why we should go to that place this evening. One reason is what is in my bag. Another, and a better one, is why should we not have a good dinner for once and do our friends a good turn as well?"

That was the sense of what each said to the other over and over again. And, as always seems the way with Russians, they argued the matter at great length.

The girl gave way suddenly. She turned to Vanderlyn. "We are going to a small restaurant which is run by some of our compatriots. I hope you will not find it very expensive."

"I'll sure I shan't," he said heartily.

He thought by the look of relief that came over her face that this was what had been troubling her.

"Monte Carlo," she went on, "is an expensive place. I would have preferred our going down to the Condamine, where there are quite nice little restaurants, but my aunt is well acquainted with the Russians who are running the place we are going to."

A Makeshift Restaurant

At the top of The Cheese they turned down a wide boulevard to their right. It was curiously solitary at this time of the evening, though now and again they passed an automobile standing in front of a business house or villa.

All at once the Countess Gregorovitch addressed Vanderlyn for the first time. "How well I can remember," she exclaimed in French, "when there were only a few beautiful villas set in large gardens in this part of Monte Carlo! The town has been sadly spoiled."

Dina chimed in. "We are going into part of one of those old villas now, Mr. Vanderlyn. It has been turned into what I believe is called an apartment house in America. Our friends possess what was once the first floor, that containing the reception rooms."

They walked on for a few yards and then the girl said quietly, "Here we are," and led the way into a kind of alley running between two high walls. Then she stopped before a low door, above which was painted the double Russian eagle.

Dina Hitrowo knocked on the low door. Three single knocks. And after some delay the door opened. There came the Russian equivalent of "Who goes there?" The countess mentioned her name, and Vanderlyn, feeling amused and rather excited, followed his two companions into a paneled writing room where there were a few unoccupied chairs and, on a first empire console, a bowl of roses.

It had evidently formed the last apartment of a fine suite of reception rooms, with splendid views of the long coast line.

A double door was suddenly opened by the man, dressed in a kind of black and yellow uniform, who had admitted them. And then, to the American's astonishment, he saw that what must have been another and rather larger drawing room had been fitted up as a kitchen.

Two chefs were moving quickly round a large cooking stove, and Vanderlyn, who had felt that morning too angered and disappointed by Dina's disappearance to eat much of the delicious lunch provided by the marchesa at Belle Colline, welcomed the aroma which drifted towards him from the various copper saucepans simmering on the stove.

"As you see, everything here has to be what the English call 'a makeshift,'" said the girl in a low voice, "and we have to traverse this kitchen to get to the restaurant."

Traverse? She seldom used a French idiom, and Vanderlyn sensed that she was feeling extremely nervous.

Dina motioned to her escort to open the double doors which were opposite those they had just come through. He did so, and then he stepped back to allow his companions to precede him into a large, lofty room, obviously the restaurant.

This fine apartment had a concave painted ceiling which the newcomer noted had been copied from one in the palace of Versailles. From the center of the ceiling hung a fine cut glass chandelier, the only reminder there that this had doubtless been the ballroom of a luxurious villa.

On the parquet floor, which was none too clean, stood a number of small tables laid for two, and in each of the embrasures of the five wide, unshuttered windows stood a table laid for four.

Good But Expensive

Though it was now the hour when Monte Carlo dines, there were only four people, and all men, in the restaurant. Each of the diners rose in his seat as the two ladies appeared, and the countess made her way deliberately to the best table, one of those laid for four, which filled up the center window. But before she sat down she said in Russian to her niece, "You had better go and see Catherine now. Then the business will have been transacted."

The girl obediently turned round, to be recalled in sharp, raucous tones: "Dina! Are you asleep or awake? You have forgotten the bag!"

Dina took up her bag and, walking quickly across the room, disappeared through a small, narrow door cut in the grisaille paneled wall.

"My niece will only be absent for a few minutes," said the countess in French. "She has gone upstairs to see a friend of ours who is not well," and she sat down.

As Vanderlyn followed her example he gave a quick glance round the room. It was plain that the four other men there were all Russians, of the noble émigré class.

The door through which Dina had just gone opened and through it there came a tall, thin, good looking man, who took up, with a negligent gesture, a menu from a sideboard on which there stood two round basins of fruit. Then he walked straight to the table where Vanderlyn and the Countess Gregorovitch had just seated themselves.

The latter exclaimed, "Now we shall be able to order our dinner and choose the wine."

As the tall, thin man who appeared was the one waiter in this curious restaurant came up close to the table Vanderlyn, with a thrill of incredulous surprise, knew him for a military attaché who had formed part of the Russian embassy in London at the time when he, Vanderlyn, had been a boy.

The countess said smiling, and in Russian, "Hail, Dimitri Alexievitch! We shall require three dinners tonight. Dina Hitrowo and I are the guests of this American gentleman. He is staying at the Château Belle Colline with the Marchesa Trescobaldi."

The man gave a quick glance at Vanderlyn and then he asked: "Did everything go as you desired yesterday evening?"

She nodded her head.

"Where is the little Dina?"

"She has gone upstairs to see Catherine. I wonder you did not meet her."

"And did she also do well?"

"As well as I thought she would do," said the countess dryly. "Her heart is not in anything she does for any one but herself."

The ex-military attaché went away towards the door giving into the kitchen, and the countess turned to Vanderlyn.

"That waiter is, as you probably realised just now, a friend of mine. At one time he commanded the czarina's own regiment of guards."

Then she beckoned imperiously to a white-haired man who was wearing the rosette of the Legion of Honor in the buttonhole of his very shabby coat. He got up, walked across the wide room, and bowed low before her.

"This is an American friend who has brought me luck at the tables!" she said graciously.

The old gentleman turned to Vanderlyn and in good English he exclaimed, "You are very welcome, sir, as the friend of a friend. Are you making a long stay at Monaco?"

Before Vanderlyn could answer the countess broke across, "My friend is a guest of the Marchesa Trescobaldi at Belle Colline. We had a rather serious accident near to the château last evening. Dina Hitrowo was driving our auto and it turned over! We were flung out on to the road and things looked bad, for it was near midnight. But suddenly the marchesa herself appeared, in the guise of an angel of mercy! She took my little Dina into the château for the night and all ended happily."

"I am glad of that," said the old man gravely.

"I hope the dinner is really good this evening," she went on.

"It is always good here," said the old man solemnly. "Good but expensive—yes!" and then he walked back to his little table.

"There is no menu from which to make a choice, Mr. Vanderlyn. There is the same dinner for each client; but I think it will please you, for the two chefs were those of the Grand Duke Nicholas. It was said—a joke no doubt—that as they remained faithful to their imperial master, should they ever return to Russia the cheka—I beg their pardon—the ogpu, will have them roasted to death!"

She laughed aloud at the amusing picture her words had evoked in her mind, and Vanderlyn, glancing across at her, told himself that she had a horribly cruel face.

Dina had come back noiselessly, and as she took the third seat at the table she put the bag at her feet.

Two Thousand Francs

The first item on the menu was Bortch soup, and the ex-colonel of the most famous of the Russian guards regiments served it from a dumb waiter he had unobtrusively rolled up close to the table.

Suddenly the countess exclaimed, "We have forgotten the wine!" and she looked expectantly at Vanderlyn.

"I think," he suggested diffidently, "that we might have some champagne; that is"—he looked from one lady to the other—"if you like champagne?"

The countess gazed at her host with quickened interest. So curious was her intent, almost avid, gaze that the color mounted slowly to Vanderlyn's forehead. With a touch of real regret he told himself that it was from this unpleasant woman Dina must inherit her curious, to him repugnant, interest in money.

The Russian noble who had once been a popular figure in the London pre-war world of fashion brought a bottle of dry Heidsieck, and after it had been in the ice pail just long enough he opened it skillfully and poured it quickly into the rather rough wine glasses, which, like the table china, were of poor common quality.

The rest of the dinner—a fresh Rhone salmon and some admirably roasted partridges, followed by an omelette en surprise—was as perfect as the Bortch soup had been. All three enjoyed their coffee with cream, a rather unusual luxury in France, and the countess and Vanderlyn each had a liqueur brandy which was of the same fine quality as had been the champagne.

"And now," said the Russian lady, with a touch of malice in her cold, inscrutable eyes, "his arrived Rabelais' 'quarter of an hour,' monsieur. I think my niece warned you that this is not an inexpensive restaurant."

And, though he was a generous man and careless about money, Vanderlyn felt surprised when the bill was put before him. No items were marked; simply the words, "Trois diners," and the curiously exact sum of two thousand francs.

He took out his pocketbook. Then he hesitated and looked at Dina inquiringly, "Does the ten per cent rule as regards the waiter exist here, mademoiselle?"

He saw that she was troubled by his question.

"I do not think," she answered at last, under her breath, "that you need give the waiter here anything. But if you do do so, you must also remember the chefs."

He put down two notes of a thousand francs each and two of five hundred francs each. To him there was something unutterably painful in the thought of a distinguished soldier who had once lived so delightful, so careless, so amusing a life, acting as waiter in this—he could not help suspecting—rather strange establishment. The restaurant was probably but a cloak for some nefarious commerce; still, he would have been surprised had some one told him how soon his suspicions were to be proved right.

Once more he noticed how the countess fixed her eyes on him with that measuring and peculiarly avid look which had so repelled him just before. No doubt she was surprised at the largesse of his gifts to the waiter and to the chefs.

As the three went through the kitchen the two white clad men saluted the American in military fashion and smiled broadly. They at any rate had been delighted with their "tips."

In the ante-chamber the ex-attaché joined them: "Surely you are going to play tonight, countess?"

The lady addressed hesitated. But Dina said sharply, "No, no, Dimitri Alexievitch——"

"But I say, 'Yes! Yes!'" he replied, teasingly.

"Ask the American if he would like a turn at roulette," whispered the countess to Dina.

"Would you like a little gamble, Mr. Vanderlyn?" and Dina Hitrowo looked frowningly at the American.

"I'm ready for any further adventure."

Lucky in Play

The Russian turned the handle of a door which seemed to form part, like the one in the restaurant, of the paneled wall, and all four passed through into a passage leading to a hall which evidently formed the center of the front of the large villa. To the right, in what had probably been the dining room of the large house, two roulette tables were in full swing. No windows were visible, for the walls of the whole room were hung with heavy yellow velvet curtains.

Vanderlyn felt an authentic thrill, for he knew that this must be one of those illegal gambling hells against which the government of Monaco fights continuously, with the aid, as Col. Bruce had told him the other night, of exceedingly heavy penalties.

Dina Hitrowo muttered in his ear, "We will play for ten minutes, Mr Vanderlyn. Not more. I feel sure this place will be raided one day soon!"

"Why stay more than five minutes?" he whispered back, for the girl looked terror-stricken, and he himself did not like the appearance of some of the men and women who were sitting round the tables.

To that question she made no answer, only muttered, "Have you any money left? If not, I will give you some."

"I have plenty of money!" And he took out a bundle of ten one hundred franc notes. "You play for me," he exclaimed.

"Shall I?"

She glanced timorously towards the countess. But that lady had gone to the farther table and was talking to a man there.

During ten long minutes Dina Hitrowo played, putting each time a hundred franc note on four numbers, and with every turn of the wheel she won!

"Now it's time to leave," she said at last.

Sweeping up the money she had won, she handed the now large bundle of notes to Vanderlyn.

He remembered the adage, "Lucky in play, unlucky in love." Perhaps Dina had already been unlucky in love? The thought made him wince.

He stuffed the notes into his pocket anyhow, and then the three were let out quickly by the front door giving into the deserted boulevard.

Once there, Vanderlyn pulled out of his pocket the token which bore the address of the garage where his car was to be found, and looked at it. "If you will walk on slowly, I will run ahead and get my car," he exclaimed.

The countess took the token from his hand and peered at it. "Rue Princesse, Condamine? That's a long way to walk from here!"

She looked up and down the empty roadway. "If we wait a moment an empty auto will doubtless come by, and if you offer the chauffeur ten francs he will take us to the Condamine." And, sure enough, even as she uttered the words, an empty automobile came rushing down the wide street.

The American hailed the chauffeur and the car stopped. "Twenty francs are yours, my friend, if you take us to the garage in the Rue Princesse."

The man hesitated, then he nodded. Vanderlyn feeling just a little ashamed of what he had done, opened the door, put his two companions inside, and then got up in front.

Who Was She?

Ten minutes later the three were speeding along in his powerful car on the wide road leading out of Monaco.

Dina Hitrowo sat between her aunt and the American, and though she remained silent and quite still, he was intensely aware of the soft roundness of the body he had carried up the great outdoor marble staircase the night before.

What was she? Who was she—really? It seemed to John Vanderlyn as if each of them had known the other a long long time; and yet? Though she had been so curiously candid in her confidences this very morning, he knew nothing of her, save the pitiful fact that she had suffered so much in the past, that now fear, when touching her with his icy finger, could scarce hurt her at all.

It is a long motor drive from Monaco to beyond Cannes. But Vanderlyn put on speed as soon as they had left Nice behind them, and they sped at what some might have thought a dangerous pace.

He heard the countess mutter in Russian, "What a pleasant way of coming home. How different from our usual method!"

To that Dina made no reply. She only moved restlessly, and that for the first time during their long drive. For a fleeting moment he felt her slender arm lightly pressing against him, and he slowed down, his heart beating fast.

After they had passed through Cannes and gone some miles beyond the town the countess spoke again this time in French, and to the driver: "Do you see that house to the right like a tower, monsieur? I should like to go in there for a moment to see a friend."

"Certainly, madame. I am in no hurry at all," and he stopped close to a high, closely shuttered building, which, looming up in the dark night, reminded him of a Scotch peel tower.

Leaping out he helped the countess to step down on to the moonlit road.

"Dina? Wake up! I must have my bag," she called out.

The girl leaned over and handed her aunt the large bag which had been at its owner's feet during the long drive. And, as soon as the countess, having rung, had been admitted into the towerlike villa, she, too, got out and stood by the auto.

"You can drive, Mr. Vanderlyn, to the château. We are quite close to Bella Mare——" she said in a low voice.

"Of course I shall stay! I shouldn't like to think of your walking along this lonely road at this time of night."

"We often do! My aunt's friend gives roulette parties every Sunday evening."

Vanderlyn took out his pocketbook and counted out ten one hundred franc notes. Then he took out the other notes that were in his pocket. They were seventeen in number. He held them out to her, "Here is your win," he said briefly.

"My win?" she repeated wonderingly.

"Yes. You were very lucky those few moments after dinner. You won seventeen hundred francs!"

She shook her head. "It is your money—of course it is, Mr. Vanderlyn."

"Indeed it isn't! See? I'm keeping back the thousand francs I gave you to play with," and he showed her the ten notes.

"D'you really mean that I may truly have these seventeen hundred francs?"

Her voice was shaking with emotion now.

"Of course I mean it," and he took the right hand hanging by her side and put the notes into it.

"It is wrong, indelicate of me to take this money! But I am terribly tempted." And he saw that her face was working with excitement.

Gold Digger?

He felt touched, and suddenly he remembered two examples of a certain type of girl as old as creation, of which the latest nickname was that of "gold digger."

True, Dina Hitrowo had nothing in common with that particularly bold, heartless, acquisitive type—yet now she valued money! And it did not seem to the man standing by her there in the bright moonlight in keeping with the rest he knew of her. Knew of her? He reminded himself sorely that, after all, he really knew nothing her—even less than she knew of him.

"I have nowhere to put these notes," she said helplessly. "I cannot keep them in my hand like this. The countess would see them and they would simply become hers."

She turned away; tears were running down her cheeks.

"Give them back to me then! And I will keep them for you till we meet again."

"We may never meet again."

She said the words very gravely, and for a moment he simply gazed down into her tear-stained face. Then that face, which to him had become a torturing enigma, lighted up, and childishly she clapped her hands.

"I have an idea! I will put them there behind the wooden post in the long grass. Then I will come out early tomorrow morning, with the pretty vanity case the Marchesa Trescobaldi gave me. But I must be quick, quick!"

She moved swiftly away from the light by the lamps and disappeared into the darkness. But a few moments later she was back to where he stood.

"Do you know," she exclaimed in a low tone, "that, though I know it is not true, that money makes me feel that I am free—free at last!"

"But are you not free now?" he asked, amazed.

She answered listlessly, "No. My own action has made me a prisoner."

A prisoner? What could she mean?

"Can you swim?" she asked suddenly.

He stared at her bent head. What an extraordinary question. But he answered at once, "No. I ought to have learned. But I never have; so, though I am fond of bathing, I feel rather a fool when I see my friends swimming."

"In that case you will know what I mean when I remind you that in the sea one walks on and on, the sand firm under one's feet. Oh how pleasant, how secure, one feels! Then, all at once——?"

She threw out her hand as if in despair. "Perhaps only just one step more—and one has lost one's foothold. One is choking, drowning."

"Quite Impossible"

He felt startled by the vehemence with which she spoke—was that the parable of her own life?

"But one can regain one's footing," he said firmly. "Even the apparently drowned often come back to life."

"Not when they have been in the water too long. But, after all, it is courage that matters in life."

"Courage?" he said questioningly.

"Do you know the Greek epitaph of the sailor? When I die I would like it put upon my gravestone."

"What is the epitaph?"

He took a step towards her and, taking her hand, drew her into the deep shadow cast by a wood of high trees on the sea side of the road.

In a trembling voice she repeated the noble words:

"Stranger? A sailor buried on this coast bids thee set sail.
Full many a gallant ship, when we were lost, weathered the gale."

She sighed deeply and, withdrawing her hand from his, walked back to the wavering light. And then, in a matter of fact voice, she observed, "Try and forget, Mr. Vanderlyn, the place where we, the Countess Gregorovitch and I, took you this evening. You should not have been taken there, for any moment that house may be raided by the Monaco police. Perhaps you can guess what the restaurant is called by some of those who go there?"

"I can never guess anything," he muttered, scarcely knowing what he was saying.

The Greek epitaph she had quoted a moment before had moved him deeply and caused him ardently to wish he could take her away from surroundings and human associates he now believed she loathed.

"They call it 'The Thieves' Kitchen'!" she exclaimed, and dissolved into gay laughter.

He could not help smiling as he replied, "It's a good nickname, I admit. But, after all, what an excellent dinner we had."

"O, how I hate and fear that place! Promise to try and forget you were ever there——"

"I promise you I will do so. And now I want to say something to you before your aunt comes back. If we are friends—and I know we are friends—tell me when and how we can meet again? Surely I may come and see you?"

"That is quite impossible."

In the moonlight he saw her face stiffen. It became masklike as she breathed the words, "She is coming back now. Be careful! I will get into the auto."

Vanderlyn listened, but he could hear no sound at all as the girl got up into the car. But she had not been there a moment before the Countess Gregorovitch noiselessly appeared in the circle of light cast by the lamps of the car.

"I regret, monsieur, to have been so long."

And as the auto leaped forward she murmured to Dina Hitrowo, "There will be roulette tomorrow afternoon, and I have promised to go."

Vanderlyn was surprised to hear the girl say sharply, "I am very tired, so you must not count on me, especially if I have to work the day after tomorrow."

COINCIDENCES

Your strange coincidence will be printed if you will submit it to "Strange Coincidences," Chicago Tribune.

Lucky Card Game.

"Come on over and play cards this evening," called a neighbor to some friends of mine, a married couple.

"O, I guess we'd better not," was the reply. "We're pretty tired. Believe we'll go to bed early."

The neighbor insisted. At length they were persuaded to go.

During the evening while they were away, lightning struck their home in a curious path along the head of their bed. Had they retired early, they would doubtless have been killed.

The Second Honeymoon.

My husband and I each had a busy and trying year—he with his work and I with my household cares and other duties. Finally we found we were beginning to get on each other's nerves, as often happens in such cases. So we decided that we needed a complete change and rest from each other. After talking it over, we agreed to take a few weeks' vacation alone somewhere, and not even to tell each other where we were going. Accordingly, we made our separate plans.

However, on the evening before our departure, we decided it would be best to give each other our addresses in event of any serious circumstances arising whereby we might need to know where the other was. Imagine our surprise to find that each had selected the same place, a small secluded country resort where we had spent our honeymoon ten years previously.

We took our vacation together, after all—a kind of second honeymoon, which we both enjoyed and from which we returned mutually benefited and in a happier state of mind.

Just Estimate.

My cousin, an above the average baritone, has to be coaxed before he will sing. Last night when we made our usual request, he laughingly asked, "Do you want the fire department around?" He was in the midst of this third number when we were actually startled by the gong and siren of the fire department, summoned to extinguish a blaze two doors away.

Texans in Westminster.

A few years ago, while in England, I had just entered Westminster abbey, and as I proceeded to scan some of the quaint epitaphs upon the ancient shrines of dignitaries, posts and statesment a tall individual came up to me. Without any formality he announced in a tone of voice sufficiently loud to be heard all over the place:

"Well, ain't this an awe-inspirin' place, eh?"

As I glanced around I saw the big hat of the "broadcaster," and knew instantly that here was a countryman of mine. No Britisher would have been dressed as the stranger was, and, furthermore, no one, unless he happened to be from the States, would have made the abbley ring out with such an "awesome" announcement.

I sort of whispered to the gentleman: "Yes, yes, but let's get out of here. You see, they are having religious services right there in the chapel."

As we went out, I said:

"You're from the United States, I believe?"

"Sure thing," he responded. "Are you-all?"

"Yes, I'm from San Antonio."

"Well, I'm from Dallas."

Needless to say, we "did" quite a bit of London together after that. The "pubs" and Mme. Tussaud's wax works were our favorites, for in them we could "awe inspire" as much as we wished and as loudly.

DRINK WATER BEFORE BREAKFAST TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Plain water best diuretic. Add a spoonful of ordinary JAD Salts to clear intestines of poisons that may pass from intestinal tract to kidney and invite trouble.

If you have miserable pains in your back, or strained feeling, don't jump to the conclusion you have a bad kidney ailment and start dosing yourself with a lot of medicine. Plain water is the best diuretic—the best flusher of the kidneys you can find.

Drink a full glass one-half hour before breakfast to which you've added a spoonful of ordinary Jad Salts. The water will flush the kidneys. The Jad Salts will cleanse the intestines of the dangerous toxins of Systemic Poisoning which are probably the real cause of those back pains.

According to recent discoveries of able men of science, these toxins frequently pass from the lower intestines to the kidneys, causing pus formations and pain—and inviting trouble. Get them out of your system and chances are, those pains you've diagnosed as "kidney pains" will go like magic. You'll feel a general easing up, less of that horribly tired and strained feeling at your back. You'll feel more snappy and alert than perhaps for years.

You can get the Jad Salts at any corner drug store. Just ask for ordinary Jad Salts. Take as suggested above. Also drink two glasses of plain water between every two meals and at bedtime. Then if your "kidney pains" aren't completely gone in six days or less, see a good doctor. Try this simple way today. You'll be glad that you did.

Spain Shatters Bourbon Dream of Absolutism

Revival of One-Man Rule Is Held Impossible.

(This is one of a series of articles by Mr. Allen, of The Tribune foreign staff, on the political and economical problems confronting present day Spain.)

By Jay Allen.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

THE ESCURIAL, Spain.—[Special Correspondence.]—Down through dark mirrors of jasper to the crypt. With every uncertain step deeper into cold and gloom as of an ice age.

The guide has a long, sad face; he wears a long, black cape and seems altogether a creature of the night. But he chats pleasantly to brighten the ascent.

His small talk echoes out through subterranean corridors and rolls back, beating waves of sound. Echoing from the distant marble caves as if some oracle were come to life back there, deep in the heart of Castile.

"Nobody would ever dispute this being the finest palace in the world," says the guide, the oracle repeating flat and every other triviality in awful accents. "If this is only the eighth wonder of the world, the others must be something maravilloso."

"Clara," you agree, half convinced anyway.

"CLARO," thunders the oracle.

"Well, then," continues the guide, "how do you explain the royal family ever coming here except to pray?"

The oracle was still propounding this one when we reached the crypt. A small octagonal chamber of rich marbles, heavily fretted up to its paneled ceiling with gilded bronze. Beneath the high altar of the dark and frigid church above, so that when the priest elevates the host he stands over 23 kings, queens, and heirs apparent of Spain.

The Unlettered Coffin.

They lie in severe and shallow sarcophagi of black marble, shelved into the walls in tiers of four. The dark marbles of the walls gleam coldly, but the black marble is dull. The plain gold lettering on each coffin is dull. The coffins are small. The dead royalties seem very close—too close.

There, to the left by the door at the bottom of a tier, is a coffin like the others but unlettered. Awaiting Alfonso XIII. It is the last on the side reserved for the kings.

Alfonso the Thirteenth. His coffin the last. The guide is portentious about it, and the superstitious are terribly impressed.

"But there's room for a couple more over there in a pinch," says a practical minded American, pointing to the vacant coffins on the walls reserved for the queens and heirs apparent.

The guide glowers, obviously figuring that tradition couldn't be broken, and are at having his effects spoiled.

So that's that; Alfonso's is the last.

Aside from the portent in that last empty niche, it must not be too gay for a monarch like him, little given to gloomy reflections that occupied his ancestors, to contemplate the marble shell that will house him, presumably through all time. While tourists of future ages rustle desperately through their guide books for his date.

There comes a noise like an avalanche down an alpine canyon. And the oracle is loose again, versatile in several languages.

Numberless Wings.

So to make way for Mr. Thomas Cook and son bringing his presentees to the court of the dead down the upper stairs, we leave the cold octagonal chamber for the outlying suburbs of the crypt where the lesser lights of Spanish nobility dwell. In snug little marble mansions which preserve from the good soil of Spain the dust of what prides, foibles, passions and madnesses.

Up above in the endless halls of the vast gridiron of gray blue stone, with its 16 courtyards forming the gridiron on which St. Lawrence broiled, its 1,600 rooms and 76 staircases, light and warmth are only relative. The palace in one of the numberless wings, for all the fact that its pretty chambers are hung with Goya's frivolous tapestries, is permeated by the deathly solemnity of the whole great naked pile, church, tomb, and palace that Philip II. raised on the rock flanks of the savage Guadarramas.

Built to become the crystal pure heart of a unitary world held in grace by Spanish theocracy, it has become simply a tomb. Petrified in its rigidities is one of the grandest and maddest ideals of history.

Philip built the Escurial for God. He ruled for God. All alone he appointed postmasters, approved village accounts, launched conquests—but in his Master's name.

God was the admiral of the Invincible Armada that was to bring "Jesus" England to Him. And so what mattered it that the duke of Medina Sidonia was a rotten sailor in every way, even to seasickness?

Spain had not always been ruled like this. "The higher up we go in the stream of history, the more we find of progress, liberty, toleration, faith, work, and virile effort," once wrote Emilia Pardo Bazan. In the twelfth century sturdy democratic institutions flourished in Spain.

Alfonso the First a proud cortes took this oath: "We who are as good as you swear to you who are no better than we to accept you as our sovereign lord, provided that you observe all our statutes and laws, and if you fail to do so. If you act according to law, king you shall be. If not, king you shall not be."

He Ruled for God.

But Ferdinand and Isabella and after them Charles V. rode down these rights, and when Philip came along he ruled for God.

But he was a despotism with a difference peculiarly Spanish: not the divine right of the king to rule so much as the divine right of the people to be ruled. The king was to be

Bowery Has Its Picture Shows, Mostly Silent

Pettey Spends Evening in One of 'Em.

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The average visitor as well as ninety per cent of the residents of New York City think of Broadway and the big movie palaces when the picture show business is introduced as a topic of conversation—and one would be astonished at just how often it is the topic of conversation. Of course, Broadway theaters have made Manhattan the center of the show world. They have advertised the big town to the ends of the world, but there are, nevertheless, a lot of picture houses that cater only to neighborhood trade.

Searching for these out-of-the-way picture houses is a diverting way to pass an evening. It is educational, entertaining and filled with surprises. Recently your correspondent deserted his accustomed bypaths and wandered down on the Bowery where ten cents buys something beside a cup of coffee.

An Old Time Theater.

The Bowery has its picture shows, too. They are not the most sanitary places in the world and neither are they the most up-to-date. There are picture shows down there that would look out of place in a mountain village of less than 200 population. The talkie has grabbed the best locations, but there are a lot of old fashioned silent houses that still fill their 200 seats every afternoon and night. A description of one of them should suffice.

There is no ticket taker. A sharp faced old lady accepts your dime and motions you toward a faded, dirty velvet curtain. Lifting its edge one passes into the theater proper. There are no ushers and few vacant seats. Let's suppose we do not object to standing. All right, now we can listen to the lone piano player. He is pounding away in the dim light and undoubtedly every key is out of tune. "Pony Boy," "On the Banks of the Wabash," "In the Good Old Summer Time," and "Sidewalks of New York" are his tunes. Finally, the picture begins to unwind. It is, on this occasion, a silent picture and, of all things, Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms."

Well, the queer gaited, bobbing Charlie would be funny to this writer if he saw him in a graveyard. He was good and one could forget the smelly, crowded room in which the picture was flickering. For the most part the audience sat silently in their seats. There was an occasional laugh or loud spoken comment on some particularly amusing feature of the picture, but there was no rowdy behavior that used to be so common in the nickle and dime theaters on the Bowery.

With most of the neighborhood movie houses enrolled in the service of young Mr. Talkie there is little difference between them and their big brothers on Broadway. It is only on the Bowery and in the foreign settlements of Manhattan and Brooklyn

Two Operas Added to Season's Repertoire; Oscar Colcaire to Make His Debut Tuesday

By Edward Moore.

DURING the coming week the Civic Opera company will, in a manner of speaking, rest upon its good works, meanwhile, no doubt, working as usual to ripen a crop of new ones. In other words, only two operas will be added to the season's repertoire in the seven days. The rest will be repeats.

"Madama Butterfly" is billed for Tuesday night, with Mary McCormic as a Japanese girl, Oscar Colcaire making his debut with this company in the part of the naval lieutenant, Pinkerton, Irene Pavloska as Suzuki, and Giacomo Rimini as the consul, Sharpless.

On Saturday afternoon the company will brush off "A Masked Ball" and set it to moving again. It is a work wherein melodramatic situations are set to music of the most tuneful, and whether or not you know or care about the situations, you can always approve the tunes. The cast should seem to have been selected with a strong hand, including, as it does, the names of Rosa Raisa, Alice Mock, Cyrena Van Gordon, Charles Marshall, John Charles Thomas, Virgilio Lazzari, Salvatore Baccaloni, and others.

Mr. Cooper will conduct the work. Mr. Moranzoni will function similarly in "Madama Butterfly."

About Mr. Colcaire.

Concerning Mr. Colcaire, another American addition to the company, the herald of publicity has this to proclaim: "Mr. Colcaire was born at Lexington, Ky., and was educated in American universities. After studying abroad he made his debut at Turin in 1926 as the duke in 'Rigoletto.' He sang at La Fenice in Venice and went on tour with an Italian company to The Hague, Amsterdam, and Rotterdam, and to Lisbon and Barcelona. He resumed his own name on returning to his own country, after singing in Europe as Edgardo Prence, for the reason that always governs American singers in Italy. Mr. Colcaire, like many successful singers, began his musical studies in another line, in his case, the violin."

While the, again in a manner of speaking, rest period is going on, presumably some of the members of the company will have memory of things that might have been slightly different in earlier performances and seek to correct them. In so hectic an occasion as an American opera season occasional rough spots are almost impossible to avoid. The surprising part of it is that there should be so few.

So far the staging of the various performances has been a subject for congratulations. Only once in a while does there seem to be a tendency to place some of the singers too far up stage. This results in two not altogether unmixed advantages—one, that the audience hears the artist that much less plainly; the other, that the artist hears the orchestra that much less plainly, especially in the case of a lightly scored accompaniment and with that much more danger of getting off pitch.

Incidentally, the orchestra would be better if it had several more members to play in the more heavily scored works. In pieces like the Wagner operas, full tone which is not blatant tone is greatly desirable, and with the best efforts of a talented conductor they have not invariably received it.

"Meistersinger" on Nov. 20.

One of the pieces that is engaging the attention of all concerned is "Die Meistersinger," now announced for its first performance on Thursday, Nov. 20. It was to have been an occasion for the debut appearance of Maria Rajdl in the part of Eva. But while she is reported as recovering rapidly from the shock of an enforced separation from her appendix, it is not considered likely that she will be able to sing by that time. Consequently, in the first performance the Eva rôle will be sung by Lotte Lehmann. In view of her past performances, she ought to be good beyond all dispute.

The rest of the cast will include Maria Ilszewska as Magdalena, Rene Maison as Walther, Hans Hermann Nissen as Sans Sachs, Alexander Kipnis as Pogner, and Eduard Habich in his debut appearance as Beckmesser. This, too, looks like good casting.

"Concert Guide," Revised.

A book of considerable interest and value to the concert goer, first issued nearly a quarter century ago, but now so thoroughly revised that at least in part it is new, has just issued from the press of A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. In its original version it was "The Standard Concert Guide," by George P. Upton, once music critic of this newspaper. In its new form it bears the same title, but with the authorship accredited to Mr. Upton and Felix Borowski. It is almost entirely concerned with the symphony orchestra, though a number of choral works with orchestral accompaniments are also included.

The reason for the revision is obvious. Dozens of composers and hundreds of compositions have come up for attention since Mr. Upton's day, and Mr. Borowski, who, like Mr. Upton, is a skilled and sympathetic commentator upon musical scores, has by judicious selection sought to bring the book up to date.

Sometimes the new sections are additions, sometimes substitutions. In the preface Mr. Borowski makes this explanation:

"Some of the compositions which were given an honored place in the earlier volume have been removed from this, for they have been relegated to that pathetic backwater in which lie, forgotten or neglected, the things that the world finds outmoded and of no account."

The book discusses nearly 450 compositions, the works of 113 composers. Discussions are compact but complete, avoiding the twin perils of detailed prolixity and the slurring of important facts. Best of all, they are interesting. With the contents of this book digested, the concert goer ought to be able to confront almost anything played by a modern symphony orchestra.

An appendix gives an account of the makeup and character of the orchestra. Somehow, one suspects that it belongs to Mr. Upton. Here is a single quotation:

"The bassoon is not a dignified instrument in form or quality. It has a double reed like the oboe. Its higher and medium tones are not unmusical, when they fit into the general harmony, but its lower tones are deep and guttural and coarse. It sometimes affects an air of dignity, but it is more at home in the grotesque, and is usually played by elderly, serious persons. As a solo instrument it is uncouth and uncanny."

Music Notes.

The Chicago Chamber Music society will sponsor a series of nine chamber music concerts at Orchestra hall this winter, of which the first will be by the Mischakoff String quartet, this afternoon. Between now and April 12, when the series closes, there will be two more concerts by the Mischakoff organization, three by the Gordon String quartet, and one each by the Amy Neill String quartet, the Barrere

Guild Stages Soviet Play About China

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—In the Theater Guild's first production of the new season, a drama from soviet Russia by way of Germany, called "Roar, China!" the emphasis is definitely upon the roar. There is little worth while drama back of the title, but a vast amount of impressive scenery. The whole stage of the Martin Beck theater, in fact, is taken up with that section of the harbor of Wan Hsien, in which H. M. S. Europa lies at anchor, just off the quay.

When you enter the theater the only curtains you see screening the stage are the sails of a small fleet of Chinese riverboats. Above them, outlined in the shadows, towers the superstructure of the warship. Along the various levels of the forestage, representing the quay, two or three Chinese coolies are stretched out asleep. They stir occasionally. Sometimes they roll over restlessly, as though irritated at being disturbed by the incoming audience.

When the play is ready the lights are gradually dimmed in the auditorium and turned up on the stage. Coolie contract men enter with their time sheets to check off the gangs unloading ships. An assortment of native police prove they are police by beating this one or that one over the back to hurry him out of the way.

Gradually, so much plot as "Roar, China!" commands is introduced. An arrogant and thoroughly disagreeable American exporter quarrels with his coolie agent and cuts his payments from 20 to 10 cents a day per man. This stirs the coolies to a subdued wrath that is fanned by communist agents among them. Soon there is a fight, and more belaboring by the police. American tourists spring up from nowhere with kodaks level to get good shots of the combatants.

The Trouble Begins.

When the excitement is quieted the American exporter hires a boatman to ferry him to the warship. Midstream he quarrels over the fee. The boatman would take him back to shore. The American would enforce his rights by toppling the boatman into the water. In the scuffle it is the American who goes overboard. Probably a jujutsu boatman.

The American cannot swim. He is drowned. And then there is great excitement. In a trice, or even quicker, the commander of H. M. S. Europa speaks for that Anglo-Saxon solidarity that projects the white man in the east. It is murder, that's what it is, and either the murderer must be apprehended and executed by dawn or the head man of Wan Hsien will be forced to execute two other boatmen, innocent though they may be.

The boatmen protest. The head man protests. Why should the innocent suffer? Why can he not be given time to find the guilty man and put him on trial? The British commander will not listen. A white man has been done in by a yellow man. The murder must be avenged. Either the guilty man or two of his fellows shall die at dawn or the town will be bombarded.

In the end the boatmen are forced to submit. They draw lots to see which one of them shall make the sacrifice. The voting condemns one who is young and a father, and another who is old and much beloved.

Hard on the Audience.

That night the sampans are moved away from in front of the warship. The decks are cleared for dancing. There is a gay time on board. Next morning the decks are cleared for action. The battleship moves closer to shore, sticking a broad prow and three of its forward guns well over the forestage. The boatmen are summoned. A garrote is set up just where row A used to be. The innocent victims are brought in and strangled to death before the eyes of everybody.

Then China roars! The coolies arise and shoot. There is a riot. As the excitement dies the audience picks up its wraps and departs.

So much for "Roar, China!" It really is not worth that much as a play. There is something crudely huge and impressive about it, but the soviet propaganda is so utterly one sided and the plot content and motivation so ancient and so obvious the play never takes grip of its audience. Never took grip of this audience, at least.

Two Real Stars.

Lee Simonson, who designed the scenery, and Herbert Biberman, who directed the cast (largely Chinese), are the real stars of the production. They have done a masterly job. Several of the Chinese actors, recruited from Columbia university mostly, give excellent performances. It is difficult for them to think fast in English, but they do very well.

"Roar, China!" written by S. Tretyakov, is popular in Russia. Meierhold, who is revolutionizing the stage for the soviet, has had it in his repertory for three seasons. The American version, somewhat softened, is a translation by Ruth Langner from the German.

A Gangster Melodrama.

We have rather gone in for spectacular melodrama during this week of which I write. The play called "On the Spot!" which I thought in London was a good humored spoofing of the home life of Chicago's Al Capone, has been brought over and restaged in American fashion by the Shuberts. American actors play it, and the result is good melodrama of its kind. Silly, extravagant, utterly unimportant, but exciting and stirring entertainment for the crowd.

Edgar Wallace, the fiction crime expert, made "On the Spot!" up, you may remember, after he had spent two weeks in Chicago a year ago. He got most of it from the newspapers, he says, and the books that have been written explaining Scarface Al. It is still running in London, with Charles Lawton playing the lead.

Wallace has the gunman living magnificently in a grand apartment across from The Tribune Tower. His living room is elaborately decorated with Ruben murals and gold leaf, and there is a pipe organ which he plays soulfully between murders. His servants speak of the winter garden, where the guests dance, the salon, where

By Mae Tinee.

GOOD MORNING!

As propaganda for penitentiaries I heartily recommend "Up the River." It's a laugh riot!

The piece depicts jail as jail would be if Punch were running it. No cold gray walls and sad little faces in Bensonatta! No, sir! This middle west prison is rah, rah, rah, collegiate, with baseball games, a love affair going on between a pair of co-eds, and the most experienced jailbreakers only leaving barracks to do a good deed and returning as soon as is humanly possible that they may help Bensonatta lick a rival hoosegow baseball team, which arrives for the fray in an armored car with pennants flying and stalwart guards prepared to do their duty if the boys get to playing too hard.

Two Real Stars.

Maurine Watkins of "Chicago" fame wrote "Up the River," and I think she must have had a good time doing it. With gay disrespect she tickles the ribs of the various phases of prison life, such as welfare work, entertainments, ball games, and honor systems, making them twist and double up in the most ludicrous contortions. She hands you a chuckle with practically every line of dialogue and has drawn her characters shrewdly, if impishly.

Casting Is Splendid.

The casting is splendid. Especially will your hearts warm to St. Louis, Dannemora Dan, and Pop, played, respectfiye, by Spencer Tracy (who is Killer Mears in the stage production of "The Last Mile"), Warren Hymer, and William Collier Sr. St. Louis is a smart fellow. Dannemora Dan, not knowing the meaning of the word "moron," is vastly proud of the fact that he was described on an examination paper as being 100 per cent that way. Mr. Collier is the wise-cracking, totally tough manager of the baseball nine. He would rather have dear old Bensonatta win than be pardoned and has stuck around his alma mater for twenty years or so, content and cantankerous. Gosh, those three fellows are funny!

John Ford, responsible for so many of Fox's fine pictures, megaphoned for this one. He's done a good job of directing, aided, I suspect, by much pungent suggestion from Mr. Collier.

Here's the Story.

As for the story, a blonde girl convict and a trusty are in love. The trusty comes of good family and his folks know nothing of his present whereabouts. They believe he's in China on business. The lady, really good and sweet at heart, has taken the rap for her employer, a confidence man.

The young man is released some

Chicago Stage Goes on Orgy of New Dramas

Postscript Notes on "Last Mile," "Lysistrata."

By Charles Collins.

THE week of the Five Openings, which enriched the Chicago playbills with a quintet of famous titles, left the first nighters, whether professional or amateur, in a condition that might be described as punch-drunk. We emerged with our imaginations reeling from this whirlwind bout with the power and skill of the theater. Play going is like all other pleasures; it should be taken temperately. And that week was an orgy.

After recuperation, of course, we will look back upon it proudly and gloat over the experience. We will count off those five successive hits upon our five fingers, and claim them as proof that the stage in Chicago is enjoying a renaissance. We will speak of the first week in November, 1930, as a gorgeous debauch that swept away our gloomy apprehensions about the conquering talkies. We will say: "If you would have evidence that the drama is not dead, look about you." It has been something like a resurrection.

"The Last Mile," a terrific modern tragedy, has shaken us with pity and with fear. "Death Takes A Holiday," a fantasy with a fine strain of somber poetry and consoling philosophy in its dialogue, has brought us an evening of unique, meditative charm. "Lysistrata" has carried us back to the pagan, bawdy humor of the ancient Greek comedy, and demonstrated the aliveness of a classic masterpiece. "Sons o' Guns," too rich a show to feel the loss of Jack Donahue [gone to meet Scaramouche and Harlequin in the Valhalla of the theater], has given us an abundance of lyric gayety and merriment. "Mendel, Inc." has revived the grotesque and shaggy fun of Jewish caricature like another "Potash and Perlmutter."

Everything But Love.

In these five shows you have almost the full gamut of the drama's voice. You have horror and heroism; the wondering dreams with which mankind faces the unknown; mockery, mirth, music and the eternal comedy of sex. You have nearly everything, as I sort out my jumbled impressions, except a notable love story—for the affair between Prince Sirki and the girl Grasia, in "Death Takes A Holiday," is too metaphysical to count as such.

Play going enough for an entire week was found in "The Last Mile" alone. This play is strong meat—in fact, it's a complete butcher's shop. No matter how sturdy your appetite for tragedy may be, this study of capital punishment and prison massacre will gorge it. Here realism is carried to the last pitiless detail, and its effect upon the observer is overpowering. You cannot escape its emotional shock, its nerve racking horror. It will shake you to the boot heels.

Not many years ago, say a generation, it would have been argued that "The Last Mile" deals with material unfit for the stage. Not so long ago, say before the world war, "The Last Mile" would have been applauded by dramatic critics and shunned by the public. The drama had to be sweet and palatable then, and this bitter, repellent play would have been a quick failure, instead of a long run success whose fame is becoming international. Its popularity is, I feel, a symptom of the toughened fiber of the popular mind. "The Last Mile" is a chamber of horrors so atrociously real that it gives calloused critics the jitters, but play goers cannot be kept away from it. In New York, it was a success they say, before it opened, merely on rumors of the violence and terror that it contains.

Here's An Actor.

The acting of Spencer Tracy, as the quiet, tigerish leader of the revolt in the prison death house, is the highlight in a brilliant and vivid performance. It deserves to be ranked with the studies of hard, sneering, dangerous virility contributed by Louis Wolheim and William Boyd to "What Price Glory." It rings completely true to an American type which the prohibition era has made all too prevalent.

This Mr. Tracy, incidentally, has, within the last few years, become our First Actor so far as hard-boiled young Americans are concerned. His rise began, as I recall, in some of Mr. Cohan's recent comedies. Last season he contributed his reserved but dominating style of characterization to the rôle of the dancehall seducer in "Blue Heaven," which failed, but not on his account. Molnar's "Lillom," one might add, was staged before the right man for its title rôle came along, and if Eva Le Gallienne ever wants to revive that play, at her Civic Repertory theater in New York, she should send in haste for Spencer Tracy.

There are no women in the cast of "The Last Mile," and there is nothing more than a hint of love interest in its story. Once upon a time this would have been a cause for astonished comment. But today, if the fact is mentioned, the proper answer is, "Well, what of it?" Modern playwriting is perfectly capable of getting along without a heroine.

Feminism Rampant.

But if "The Last Mile" stands for male austerity, you will find its opposite in "Lysistrata." Here feminism runs rampant; and, although this play was written some 2,340 years ago, the women of today find it in accord with some of their most advanced ideas of emancipation. I have a translation by Laurence Housman, which was published by the Women's Press of London in 1911—evidence of a stage production as feminist propaganda when the English suffragettes were crusading violently for their "rights" under Pankhurst leadership. Ancient as "Lysistrata" is, it anticipated the modern woman. And when confronted Little Symphony, and the London String quartet. Admission to the main floor and balcony will be 25 cents, except in the cases of the Barrère and London organizations, in which case 50 cents will be charged. At that, it is about as cheap a series of first class music as is to be found anywhere.

The Mischakoff String quartet takes its name from Mischa Mischakoff, first violin of the quartet and concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. The other members, Frans Polesny, second violin; Clarence Evans, viola, and Daniel Saidenberg, violoncello, are likewise members of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. This afternoon's program will include these quartets: Beethoven's opus 95, No. 11 Schubert's "Satz" in C minor; and the single specimen from the pen of Maurice Ravel.

The first soloist of the season with the Chicago Symphony orchestra will appear next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. That soloist is Erika Morini, violinist, who first appeared as a wonder child with the orchestra in the year 1921. On this occasion she will play the Glazounow concerto in A minor. The program will also include Beethoven's first symphony, Louis Gruenberg's symphonic poem, "The Enchanted Isle," postponed from last week, and the dances from Borodin's "Prince Igor."

The orchestra will also play a Tuesday afternoon concert and a Thursday evening popular concert. General programs will be given on both occasions.

Further news from the Chicago Symphony orchestra is to the effect that there is an opportunity for a young violinist or cellist to appear as soloist in the concerts of March 13-14. The plan was successfully adopted for pianists last season, when Grace Nelson appeared. For the present season a committee consisting of Glenn Dillard Gunn, Arne Oldberg, and Adolf Weidig has been appointed to advise with Mr. Stock on the choice of the artist.

This is not a contest, but the following conditions will be in force:

1. Applicants must live within a fifty mile radius of Orchestra hall.
2. They must have had at least three public appearances, one of which must have been with an orchestra.
3. They must be between the ages of 18 and 30 years.
4. Violinists must have prepared at least one American composition with orchestra, any modern work with orchestra, and any of the classics with orchestra; cellists must have prepared any modern work with orchestra and any of the classics with orchestra.
5. Applicants must be prepared for audition before the advisory committee when called.

Application blanks may be had upon request to Henry E. Voegeli, manager of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, Orchestra hall, Chicago.

Paderewski, the famous, is to give a piano recital at the Civic Opera house next Friday evening. Here is a personality of the keyboard such as the world has not seen since, perhaps, the days of Liszt, a personality not in the least diminished by his career as statesman, during which he was the first premier of Poland.

This will be his seventeenth tour of the United States. His first was in 1891. These days he makes his complete tour in a private car, maintaining an entourage of eight persons and practicing four hours a day while the car is sidetracked in the railroad yards, to the astonishment and sometimes to the delight of railroad employés. They add that he is a devotee of the movies with a special taste for comedies; that he plays bridge and piquet; that he is an admirer of Ben Franklin and has a complete collection of the old American's writings. He owns a ranch of 2,600 acres in California. In Europe he makes his home at Morges, Switzerland.

His program on Friday will be as mighty as any he ever played, although he was 70 years old last Thursday. It will include the Handel-Brahms variations, two sonatas, Beethoven's D minor and Chopin's B minor, a Chopin group, a Debussy group, Schelling's transcription of Wagner's prelude to "Tristan and Isolde," and the Paganini-Liszt "La Campanella."

The Kedroff quartet, appearing this afternoon at the Civic theater, is to give another program tomorrow night at the New Trier High school, Winnetka, for the benefit of the Bryn Mawr college regional scholarship fund.

Richard Hageman, who has written many songs, some of them best sellers and occupying a high rank in the American output, is in Germany with the score of his opera which he has composed to the play, "Caponsacchi." Written to an English text, it has been translated into German for performance in that country. A definite promise exists that it will be sung by the opera company in Hamburg, and Mr. Hageman is in negotiation with the managements of several other organizations of the country.

One result of the Chicagoland Music Festival last August is shown in a letter received from the parents of William B. Weisell, winner in the cornet contest. Shortly after the contest he received a full musical scholarship, including uniforms, board and room, also the bugler's position with pay at Culver Military academy. This, say Mr. and Mrs. Weisell, had much to do with his receiving an appointment to the Annapolis Naval academy from the Eighth congressional district for the coming year.

A Letter.

Dear Mr. Moore: Do you not consider it about time that women were given a chance in our great symphony orchestras? Certainly it is a very narrow minded prejudice that keeps conductors from engaging feminine players. They should get over the idea that women are not as capable musicians as men.

Assuredly women all over the world have shown that they can handle positions with ease which were thought impossible a few years back. Men, of course, have usually had a much better opportunity to equip themselves for a musical career, having only their music to occupy their time, whereas women had their art and a hundred other things to do at the same time. In these days, however, when so much work is given to modern machinery, women musicians are becoming more and more equal to men.

Why should a great orchestra leader hesitate for a moment in accepting them for the same positions as men hold? I am sure it is also the public at large who objects to women symphony players, except perhaps as harpists. How utterly narrow and absurd! Does sex have anything to do with the ability of an artist? Since when? The old adage that men needed positions more badly than women is antiquated now, as women have just as many responsibilities today as the opposite sex. There are a great many orchestra players who are not married with large families to support and there ARE many fine artists among women who need positions worse than the former.

It will not be long, I am sure, before some broad-minded orchestra leader will give women the opportunity they well deserve and organize a symphony orchestra composed of women and men players to compare favorably with the Boston, Chicago, New York, or any other of the greatest orchestras of the world.

Very sincerely yours,
LORIA D. SANDERS.

Chicago Stage Goes on Orgy of New Dramas

Postscript Notes on "Last Mile," "Lysistrata."

By Charles Collins.

with its bawdy frankness in this brilliant revival, the modern woman bravely refuses to blush.

"Lysistrata," as staged by the Philadelphia Theater association, is a notable show, utterly pagan in its lack of sex modesty and thoroughly up-to-the-minute in its satiric humor. Playgoers who think of the classic Greek drama in terms of cold white marble statues will find here an animated burlesque of ideas, rich with primitive laughter.

In the haste of a first night review, written in competition with election returns, I neglected to mention Hope Emerson's striking contribution to the performance. She is the burly Lampito, Sparta's broad-minded and heavy-handed contribution to the federation of Hellenic women's clubs, and one of the hits of the performance. Nydia Westman, remembered as the funny little country girl in "Pigs," also shines in the cast as that quaint young fraud, Kalonika. Both Miss Emerson and Miss Westman were drafted out of the New York company for the Chicago engagement.

"Lysistrata" is a classic with a weight of scholarship around its neck. But I believe that this production has an appeal that extends to those who think that Sparta is in Wisconsin and Athens in Georgia.

B'way Openings

New York, Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Five new plays and one revival are on the first night list this week. "Mr. Samuel," "Grand Hotel," and "The Tyrant" seem to promise the most interest. The announcements follow:

"Mr. Samuel"—Opens tomorrow night at the Little theater. This play marks the return from Hollywood of Edward G. Robinson, who has not acted in these parts since the days of "Kibitzer." Winthrop Ames adapted the play from the French of Edmond Fleg, and Mr. Robinson's supporting cast will include Wallis Clark, Manart Kippen, Adelaide Prince, H. Dudley Hawley, and Gladys Lloyd.

"Bird in Hand"—Opens tomorrow night at the 49th Street. A return engagement of John Drinkwater's successful comedy. In the cast will be Frank Petley, who played in the original company here.

"Grand Hotel"—Opens Tuesday night at the National theater. An adaptation from the German of Vicki and a play which from all accounts calls for an unusual production. William A. Drake has made the English version. Acting in it will be Henry Hull, Eugenie Leontovitch, Siegfried Rumann, Hortense Alden, Sam Jaffe, Joseph Spurm-Calleia, and Romaine Callender.

"Maid in France"—Opens Tuesday night at the Cort theater. The principal function of this play is to provide a vehicle for Lya De Putti, the latest of the film notables to try the stage. Jack Lorrie is its author and describes it as a farce-comedy.

"The Tyrant"—Opens Wednesday night at the Longacre theater. Rafael Sabatini's play of the days of Cesare Borgia, which was performed in London five years ago with Matheson Lang in the leading role. Louis Calhern will have that part here, and the cast will further include Lily Cahill, Averill Harris, and George Riddell.

"Hello, Paris"—Opens Saturday night at the Shubert theater. Chic Sale in a long impending musical show which got its start in the pages of Mr. Croy's "They Had to See Paris." Polly Walker will be the leading member of a large supporting company.

Vox Playgoer

To the Dramatic Editor:

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—Since you remember so many of my songs I thought you might be interested to know that Chicago played an important part in at least two of my songs. "The Streets of Cairo" was written in Chicago in 1893. The words,

She never saw the streets of Cairo,
On the Midway she had never strayed,
She never saw the hoochee-koochee,
Poor little country maid—

were inspired by a bucolic damsel in oriental trappings doing a koochee dance on the Midway at the World's Fair. My wife, Bonnie Thornton, was appearing with Tony Pastor's show in the theater at the fair ground. She introduced the song there the day it was written, and it was a great success.

I wrote "When You Were Sweet Sixteen" at the Cliff house in San Francisco in 1898, and sang it at the last performance of my engagement at the local Orpheum theater. My next date was at the Masonic Roof Garden, Chicago, and I sang it there during my engagement. John J. Murdock was stage manager and he has always considered Chicago the birthplace of "When You Were Sweet Sixteen."

I am still writing songs, but am indifferent about publishing them because I have always been out-smarted by the publishing gentry.

JAMES THORNTON.
"Sweet Adeline" Company.

Chicago, Nov. 5.—By all rules and centuries of usage, Lysistrata must be pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, just as one says "SO-crates" and not "So-CRA-tes."

Furthermore, changing the pronunciation "to avoid sibilance" is unnecessary. "Lysi-" means "dissolver of," "strata" means "war," the compound name being of course intentionally symbolical of what she does in the comedy.

Pronouncing the name with a breath division following this etymology, the result is a caressing "Ly-SI-stra-ta," the breath lingering on the final "ta." With this proper pronunciation there is no more hissing sound than there is in the word "passionate."

Oddly enough, the one really logical reason that might have been given for pronouncing this name as the present company does has not (so far as I have been able to notice) been given.

The Greeks, while following the quantity of their vowels instead of conversational accent of words in composing their poetry, at the same time, presumably, indicated that accent as we do when reciting it. These accents are preserved, and what the Greeks actually said was "LysiSTRAta" and "SoCRAtes." RICHARD ATWATER.

New in Chicago

"HOTEL UNIVERSE," the play by Philip Barry which was produced by the Theater Guild in New York last spring, is the only novelty of the legitimate stage in Chicago this week. It will be given by the Goodman Theater Repertory company as its second offering of the season, opening Tuesday night. Last winter the Goodman won praise by its staging of this same dramatist's "Holiday."

This new play of Mr. Barry's deals with a group of more or less unhappy people in a winter resort on the Riviera. They are all flirting with the idea of suicide. But each, in turn, encounters an eccentric, supposedly demented scientist, who probes into their souls with helpful results. "Hotel Universe" is "modern" and experimental of tone, and provoked much discussion when acted in New York. The performance will be given, on the author's demand, without intermissions.

The cast will include: Ellen Root, Katherine Krug, Florence Williams, William Brenton, Harry Mervis, Earl McDonald, Butler Mandeville, Carl Kroenke, and Ruth Frank.

Recent Guild Successes.

While its New York season has begun several weeks later than usual, the Theater Guild appears to have started off with unusual promise. Both "Roar, China!" and "Elizabeth the Queen" give indications of thriving considerably beyond their subscription period.

ARMCHAIR PLAYGOER

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

ALTHOUGH "Elizabeth the Queen" is not a dramatization by Maxwell Anderson of Lytton Strachey's "Elizabeth and Essex," it is said by those who know that the mood of one is akin to the mood of the other, in the sense that both are historical tales treated with deft charm. They both concern themselves with the same period in history, and "Elizabeth and Essex" is as good a book to read as any for armchair playgoers to induce an "Elizabeth the Queen" mood.

MARC CONNELLY.

Katherine Anthony's "Queen Elizabeth" is another picture of the heroine of the play, a picture done also in the modern manner. If you prefer something in the older fashion, there is the "Life of Elizabeth," by Mandell Creighton, written in 1896, twenty years after his famous "The Age of Elizabeth." Mandell Creighton was bishop of London from 1897 to 1901, and previously editor of the English Historical Review.

The new illustrated edition of "The Green Pastures," by Marc Connelly, has just arrived. The illustrations are by Robert Edmond Jones, who designed the set for the play. And there is an introduction by the author in which he says, "It will be obvious to any one who inspects this book that it is less a handsome edition of 'The Green Pastures' with illustrations by Robert Edmond Jones than it is a collection of Robert Edmond Jones' drawings, accompanied by the text of the play. It is a happy experience for the author to find his work in such magnificent company."

There is a special de luxe edition, signed by the author and the artist, which is a gem of bookmaking. I saw a copy of it the other day, an elegant volume, and a perfect gift, I should say, for some one interested in the theater, provided, of course, the 550 copies of the limited edition aren't all gobbled up by collectors. If they are the regular un-de luxe illustrated edition is a pretty grand present in itself.

IN CHICAGO.

If you are one of those who think that "Alice in Wonderland" is the most delightful book ever written, you may watch it in action by Tony Sarg's marionettes, which will present it on Saturday at the Goodman theater, and you may have, thus, the excuse to read again the most gorgeous foolery in English.

A few years ago I used to ask prominent authors what books they would rather have written than any other. I got the idea for those "confessions" from rereading "Alice in Wonderland" [as I do, whenever I get a chance] and putting it down with the feeling "I wish I had written that." To my immense surprise many of the authors I questioned gave "Alice in Wonderland" as the book which always inspired them with that appreciative envy.

So don't think it's just a child's book. It was written by one of the most methodical, scientific minds in England—one of the greatest mathematicians of England, Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, who just called himself Lewis Carroll.

Alberto Casella, the author of "Death Takes a Holiday" [which Walter Ferris has so adapted for the American stage that it is more often called his work than the Italian's], is not to be confused with Alfredo Casella, the composer, whose music has been played often by Mr. Stock and the symphony and who himself appeared here as composer-director at a concert, a few seasons ago. Alberto Casella is known in Italy for this one play, which is regarded as a classic.

Movie Notables Enliven Press Club Dinner

Speeches, Wise Cracks Keep Guests Laughing.

By Rosalind Shaffer.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—Stellar attractions featured the guest dinner of the Hollywood Women's Press club this week at the Russian Arts club. Marie Dressler acted as toastmistress and was ably assisted by Polly Moran every time Marie stopped to take a breath.

Lawrence Tibbett implored the irrepressible Polly to stop clowning, as he was laughing so hard that he feared he would be unable to go through with his part of the program, which included two solos. Tibbett's resonant laugh rang out like a chorus of the "Whip Song," in "The Rogue Song."

While the Russian orchestra of the café played their Balalaikas and sang rollicking Russian songs, Polly got her biggest laughs by singing nonsensical pseudo-Russian, which she improvised as she got inspired by the heavy applause of the one hundred and fifty at the dinner.

Rising to speak, Polly had a great line and got a hand when she gave in an aside: "Ever been in one of these aa-aa—houses? You know the kind, aa— this and aa— that; don't touch anything." With this Polly began pushing the plates around to show her disgust with fussy people. Then she snatched her hat off, and while she apologized for her lack of marcel, she swore her hair really had been waved that afternoon.

Fagged but Funny.

Marie Dressler, her teammate, complained of being fagged, as she had been crawling under tables for closeups all day, but put over a few good cracks herself. Arthur Caesar, wit and writer, spoke, recalling his original gag about press agents being those who cackle while the hen lays the egg. He referred to Hollywood as the land of Yes and Nod and mentioned that one night when he was not feeling so well from a touch of neuritis and his head began to wag sideways in the midst of a conversation with a movie mogul his wife came up behind him and said, "Are you going to 'No' us out of a living?" and smacked his head so that it nodded up and down as it should.

Haliburton Talks.

Richard Haliburton, world traveler and writer, spoke feelingly of his pleasure at being present and while thus stirred said: "I have roamed the seven seas and the five continents and it is only in the last few months that I have come to realize that there is one place in the world where all the women are beautiful, where flowers bloom all the year, where wine flows freely," and then as everyone was smiling self-consciously and waiting for him to say "Hollywood," he finished by saying "and that place, ladies and gentlemen, is Chattanooga, Tennessee."

Lawrence Tibbett sang "The Road to Mandalay" and the prologue to "Pagliacci" to thunderous applause. Edgar Allen Woolf, impersonator, employed at the M-G-M studio as a writer, gave two impersonations so funny that Louis B. Mayer has decided to make an actor out of him again. Other guests included Jeanette MacDonald, Marguerite Churchill, Hedda Hopper, and Irvin Willat.

Janet Gaynor is to sing again, without a sither this time, in "The Man Who Came Back." De Sylvia Brown and Henderson are writing the song for her. If they would just let Janet quit singing and simply smile it would be enough.

News of Films and Players.

"I have sworn off gambling," Clara Bow said at a party this week. "There will be no more roulette for me. I am playing checkers, dominoes, and parchesi."

Rex Lease, who blacked Vivian Duncan's eye and who was in turn knocked down by Vivian's brother, Harold, and figured in another fistic affray at the Los Angeles Press club, has been dropped by the Tiffany Stahl studio. Lease has featured in cowboy pictures, but now Ken Maynard is dong the western hero stuff for Tiffany.

Mary Garden is to make screen tests here this week, according to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The company wants to star her in an operatic picture if the tests turn out well. Miss Garden was in pictures once before, playing in "Thais" for Sam Goldwyn.

Douglas Fairbanks is not the only athlete in the Pickford-Fairbanks family. Mary in "Kiki" has fights scheduled with Reginald Denny, Margaret Livingston, Joseph Cawthorn, Fred Walton, and Fred Warren. A few kicks in a strategic location, a few tumbles down stairs and other such stuff fills out the slapstick comedy that is being made for the old sex sizzler.

SEEN AT PRINCESS

HELEN VINSON.

"DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY," the second play in the subscription season of the Dramatic League of Chicago, at the Princess, has Philip Merivale as its star, and this attractive young actress as leading woman. It is a fantastic comedy in which Mr. Merivale represents Death, visiting earth incog. Miss Vinson stands as a symbol of Love—with which Signor Death trifles a bit before he returns to his own dismal business.

Guild Stages Soviet Drama About Troubles in China

By Burns Mantle.

they dine, and of innumerable other guest rooms, including that in which the bodies are stored preliminary to being dumped on the lake shore.

As a rum runner and the proprietor of three establishments in Cicero, this Tony Perrelli does a business of approximately $2,000,000 a year. His current mistress is a half caste Chinese girl [played by Anna May Wong], but he is making arrangements to send her to Cicero and take on the wife of one of his lieutenants, a loud-mouthed killer from New York.

Chinese Loves Gunman.

The play's romance centers about the love of the Chinese girl for a novice gunman who is put on the spot by Tony to appease the wrath of a rival leader, Mike Feeney of the north side. The kid has bumped off one of Feeney's favorites. The Chinese girl gives the boy all and commits suicide when he is shot.

Crane Wilbur plays Tony and makes a creditably sentimental and shifty flint hearted leader of him. Wilbur rubbed his cheek into the mascara marking Glenda Farrell's eyebrow the first night, which left a mark. And though he rubbed his cheek clean at his first exit, some of his reviewers spoke of the "scar" that identified him unmistakably with the elusive Al.

Miss Wong is a bit strange to the spoken drama, or seems so, though I understand she has played considerably in Europe. But she is otherwise perfectly in character as the Chinese girl. Seeking to find out something of her origin, I was told by a bright little New Yorker that she was "an American girl gone wong." Which sounds reasonable.

Spiritualized Drama.

A third foreign importation of the week is a spiritualized drama called "The Last Enemy." It was played with some success a year ago in London and has to do with the return of departed souls and their protection of their spiritual dependents upon the earth.

The author—Frank Harvey. His reasoning, though no more fantastic than any other evolved by those thousands who have been groping the last several years for some faith with which to replace the orthodox Christian beliefs which no longer satisfy them, does not come through very clearly.

He shows, first, two antarctic explorers dying in the north. Then he takes them up the golden stairs and stops them at the first landing for instructions from one of heaven's janitors. They still have considerable climbing to do, he explains, and if they like, they can return temporarily to the earth to see how things are getting on there. They won't find it easy to help any one, however, unless the one in trouble calls for help.

As a further explanation of life in general the celestial guide points out that because of Adam's demand for company we are, each of us, a divided entity. No man, that is to say, is complete until he gets his rib back. Every Adam has his Eve, and every Eve her Adam. Sometimes they find each other during the earth life, and sometimes they don't. But they are affinities, and their search goes on through eternity. Also, a man may be the spiritual father of his affinity's children without being aware on earth of their existence.

The play returns to the earth then and takes up the love affairs of a young girl wooed by two soldier boys. When she stands in danger of being seduced by one of them her spiritual father, one of the antarctic fellows, walks through a bolted door to save her. And yet, as it turns out, these two young people are affinities, which does not seem to make the breed very protective.

An English company does the playing. It includes Jessica Tanday, a lovable ingénue who played last winter in "The Matriarch."

Disciples of Mr. Leiber.

Fritz Leiber Jr. appeared with his father's company the other night as the Prince of Morocco in "The Merchant of Venice." Young Leiber, who is just entering his 20's, has for several seasons been a "super" in his father's productions, when his studies permitted. Scouts report that another of Mr. Leiber's minor actors is John Bryan Owen, grandson of William Jennings Bryan and son of Ruth Bryan Owen. He acts under the name of John Bryan, and they say that he suggests his famous grandparent.

How 4,000,000 Women Darken Their Gray Hair So Naturally No One Can Tell so it must be the better way

If you are looking for a way to restore gray, streaked or faded hair to its natural youth color . . . don't endanger the health of hair or take chances on its appearance by experimenting with a new and untried preparation. You don't have to. Here's the restorer that has been used successfully by more than 4 million women who refuse to be gray. They will all tell you it is the surest and very quickest way to give hair the exact shade you desire—without harming the hair or scalp in the least. As a matter of fact it darkens the hair so evenly and naturally that no one will ever know. So don't take foolish chances with your hair. Just ask any druggist for a bottle of Wyeth's Sage & Sulphur.

Satiric Comedy of Prison Life Evokes Mirth

five months before his sweetheart is freed. He goes back to his old New England home to find the swindler who has done wrong by blonde Judy all set to sell his bogus stocks to Steve's dear old mother—WITH, mind you—Steve's aid! Sezze:

"If to help me, sir, you fail,
I'll tell the folks you've been in jail."

[Though not in poetry.] "Folks?" O, Steve has a sister, too.

Well, the news of the lad's plight travels back to Bensonatta. St. Louis and Dannemora. Dan decide they'll have to take some time off to settle matters for their old college chum. They do take time off and they do settle matters—satisfactorily for all concerned. Returning, as I told you, just in time to save the day for the Bensonatta team.

Love Stuff Is Hokum.

The love stuff is pretty hokumy and I have no love for Humphrey Bogart as an actor. Claire Luce is pleasing as Judy. She makes her screen debut in this film. Joan Marie Lawes, small daughter of Warden Lawes of Sing Sing, also makes her first screen bow, as the Bensonatta warden's daughter. She's a natural and interesting little girl who makes you think of Mitzi Green.

The episodes you will especially enjoy are the jail entertainment, during which St. Louis and Dan make their getaway, the baseball game, and the entry of this hard boiled pair into village society.

Don't let the fact that "Up the River" has no big names keep your from seeing the picture, for, no two ways about it, this satiric comedy, which more than borders on burlesque, is one of the most enjoyable productions the year has brought forth.

Bits aBOUTem.

WHEN "Half Gods" comes to the screen it will be known as "Free Love" and CONRAD NAGEL and GENEVIEVE TOBIN will have the leading rôles. . . . DORIS KENYON will be seen in the cast of "The Single Sin," starring June Collyer. . . . MITZI GREEN and LEON ERROL have two of three featured rôles in "Mr. and Mrs. Haddock Abroad." . . . GEORGE O'BRIEN has signed a new long term contract with Fox. . . . FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN is back in stock, "broke but happy." . . . MARIE DRESSLER and POLLY MORAN are about to start work on a new comedy, titled "Reducing." . . . CHESTER MORRIS has a new girl—ha ha!—she's his daughter! . . . HOWARD HUGHES is trying to secure the original cast of "Front Page" for his film version of the play. . . . RAMON NOVARRO expects to remake "Scaramouche" in sound. . . . NORMA SHEARER won the academy reward for the year's best performance by an actress. Her work in "The Divorcée" won her this honor from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. . . . EL BRENDEL will become a leading man in his next Fox picture, "Poor John."

See you tomorrow.

Broadway Futures.

Eight new shows are scheduled for the week-end beyond this in New York and most of them are planning to crowd to town on Monday and Tuesday nights. The list includes Pagnol's "Marseilles," "The Vinegar Tree," Mr. Rose's revue, "Sweet and Low"; the Greek actress, Marika Cotopouli, in a classical tragedy; the Ziegfeldian "Smiles," Mr. Belasco's "Tonight or Never," with Helen Gahagan heading the players; and Miss Cowl in the second production of her repertory season—Mr. Levy's "Art and Mrs. Bottle."

Frost is on the Golf Ball.

The question has arisen as to how fares the capsule golf courses, known hereabouts as "Minnie"—short for miniature. Well, a canvass of the city's back yards and vacant lots discloses that most of them have gone into winter quarters. There is no sign of the game approaching an indoor magnitude comparable to that it enjoyed out of doors, but there still is a threat to the movies in the putter and pellet.

The courses, links or what you may call 'ems, are scattered about in a lot of loft buildings and formerly barren housetops, but the magnificent indoor "country clubs" that some one promised us last August have sprung up only in isolated spots. All in all, the frost is on the golf ball and the putter's on the shelf until next spring.

New Film for Winter Garden.

"The Life of the Party" is coming to town this week to take the place of "The Office Wife," who has been occupying the great big Winter Garden for O, so many weeks. "The Life of the Party" is the latest film made all in techni-color and is a comedy set in sunny Havana. The story concerns the adventures of a little gold digger. Jack Whiting, Winnie Lightner, Irene Delroy and a lot of other laugh-provoking folks are in the cast.

New York still is expectantly awaiting news of the release date of those two Marlene Dietrich talkies—"The Blue Angel," filmed in Germany last year, and "Morocco" made in Hollywood not so many moons ago.

Right now Otis Skinner in "Kismet" at the Hollywood theater, and Harold Lloyd in "Feet First" at the Rialto are the two most popular shows in town. The theaters are as far apart as the themes and the leading actors.

Opportunity Missed.

Somebody missed a good bet last election night by not staging one of those glittering Broadway movie openings. The rain drove the election day holiday crowd in off the streets and every movie palace along the main road was turning them away before ten o'clock. The crowds were keen for election returns, but they refused to stand in the rain to be advised. The movie houses stepped into the breach and advertised that returns would be flashed on the screen at frequent intervals. They were rewarded with capacity patronage.

Color must come before the powder

AND POWDER MUST BLEND WITH THE SKIN

THE natural skin tone you hear so much about today cannot be had with bargain counter powder. For in this day and age no sophisticated woman relies on her powder box for color. Color must come first and the powder that goes on top must actually blend with the skin . . . That new Beige powder from Primrose House is the favorite in smart circles today because it is exactly the right shade and texture for that natural effect. So fine, it actually becomes a part of the skin. It does not cake or clog the pores nor does it ever leave the face spotty or hard as do the very light or extra dark shades. Costly? Perhaps. But you can easily learn its worth by buying a dollar's worth of this $3 powder.

At all better class drug and department stores, in boxes, $1 and $3. Primrose House, 595 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Spain Shatters Bourbon Dream of Absolutism; No One-Man Rule

By Jay Allen.

dored while he acted in the right as God's vicar, but not otherwise. The great churchmen of the epoch made this clear to a fervently religious people kept eternly in the narrow path by the Inquisition.

The ideal was of course grandiose. The king, the church, the army, all instruments of the divine will, and even the colonies the pretension was not so much to colonize as to Christianize. But in practice. . . .

From his humble bed in the shadowy hall in the heart of the Escurial Philip could look on to the blaze of the high altar, and there he died, sadly aware that such things are not possible on this earth. But the dream that colored his lifetime long ruled Spain, and its wreckage clutters the scene to this day.

To follow the Hapsburg despotism of God and his vicar-king, the first Bourbon, the fifth Philip, brought into France a compacter despotism inspired by his Uncle Louis' "I am the state." Despotism of king alone, God being relegated to a quite silent partnership. But only the king's point of view really changed, for the Spanish persisted in seeing God in it all when they saw anything.

Struggle Against Fate.

The Bourbons rule to this day. After vicissitudes. The worst when Napoleon broke rudely in upon their moldering order. Quite inadvertently he aroused all Spain to their rescue. Spaniards wanted back their chains, but they wanted a voice in how they were to be worn; in other words, a constitution.

And their claim has been more or less to the fore ever since. So the king-state and the king-vicar were done for. In 1812 democracy, stifled three hundred years, was on the point of revival.

But the Bourbons struggled against fate for a half century more. The ages of intolerance, when all dissension had been pruned, burned away, and left Spain docile. Finally came disaster at home and abroad, a new dynasty, a republic, and in 1876 their restoration as constitutional monarchs. They bowed at last or seemed to bow to the ideal of the people-state, taking or seeming to take their chance to enter safely the glass case along with the other constitutional mummies.

Alfonso XII., this one's father, was only too glad. Take out a handful of Spanish silver and on an old duro you see his delicate features and the words, "By Grace of God, Constitutional King of Spain." But he had time and died young.

On another duro you see his son as a bald baby, a curly haired boy, and a handsome youth, all with the same formula. But on the brightest, 50 centime piece stamped with the cold features of the mature Alfonso XIII. of 1928, what do you read but this: "By Grace of God, King of Spain."

Despotism again. Since 1923. But definitely not a success.

Play in Three Acts.

Now Alfonso, constitutional baby, grown man, went in for despotism himself—or so he hopes—is quite a boy. The events of his career thus far fall into three acts, like a play. Act I., "The King Reigns." Act. II., "The King Rules" (there is a difference). Act. III., "The King Repents." Characters: King [Bourbon]. Army [Spanish]. Church [Roman]. Politics [Spanish]. People [Spanish]. These latter curiously ignored, save for offstage noises, but the last act is not to be written.

Consider first the king.

By grace of God indeed. Born six months after his father's death—almost a miracle child. So feeble that one thought he would live under the regent from his first moment of all those titles, "King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, and the two Sicilies, Jerusalem, Navarre, Granada, Toledo, Valencia, Majorca, Minorca, Gibraltar, the Canaries, the Indies, Count of Barcelona, Lord of Viscaya, etcetera."

Maria Cristina of Hapsburg set herself to the double task of saving a feeble son and a feeble régime. She succeeded. Her memory as a constitutional regent is revered by all; her son is as strong and lithe as the Golden Boy make in Toledo.

She fed him chicken breasts and ordered him to take exercise. So well that by the time he was a youth the old conservative prime minister, Antonio Maura, had to forbid him to drive automobiles, then a new toy, up and down the palace steps.

Today no one can compel him to use caution on that mountain road from Santander to Madrid on which he holds the record, 650 kilometers in ten hours. His secret police can't keep up.

He is the best shot in Spain. When the court goes hunting boar and deer in the rolling Gasa del Campo on the edge of town he outhikes them all. He sails yachts, loves polo, hates golf.

He has the charm of all vivid intense natures. He is a good listener, warms by eager conversations with people, and fights rather shy of books. And the ladies of the diplomatic corps say he is a "divine" dancer.

Among men a good fellow. He is rough with soldiers, suave with diplomats. Our late Ambassador Alexander Moore, whose sublime disregard for court etiquette caused many a diplomatic to slip from raised eyebrows, is a friend. To an English officer who, after a review, politely proffers the opinion that the troops marched very well indeed, he says, with a grin, "You're a d . . . d liar and you know it."

Vices and Wits.

Americans in Spain frankly admire his energy, his inquisitiveness, his common sense; he has made a fortune in investments, subways and whatnot. Most Anglo-Saxons who meet him never by him ever afterwards. As always, astonished to find that kings were human beings and inclined to give their credit for being so, they insist that he is "democratic." Spaniards are elusive him and find him an excellent fellow, but not think "democratic" quite an accurate description. But Spaniards have that quirk of character and will persist in seeing the human being first in kings as they do in beggars. The king can be respected because he is a man, but not the man because he is the king, even though the king's job be respected as the image of God or what have you.

An imbecile on the throne could be tolerated as a symbol of God's will or even ignored as just one of those things that happen. To glorify the job Spaniards don't feel the necessity of glorifying the man as they do in England. That is why it is useful for the king in Spain to command admiration for his human qualities or, as in the old days, be covered by a grand ideal.

Alfonso has nerve, too. Thirteen attempts have been made on his life, but he is always barging ahead of his guards.

And wits. Which is remarkable, because in the Spanish atmosphere things happen to the wits of dynasties. Old Spain's revenge on them, some one says. The Hapsburgs degenerated from giants like Charles V. and Philip II. to the sodden Philip IV., who took lessons on statecraft from a cloistered nun, but fathered 30 illegitimate children all by himself, and the epileptic Charles the Bewitched. The Bourbons slipped from Philip V. and Charles III., able despots, to nitwits and scoundrels like Charles IV. and Ferdinand VII., bootlickers to Napoleon.

Alfonso, both Bourbon and Hapsburg, is a strange belated flowering of both, the first monarch cut on a kingly pattern since Charles III., dead now these 150 years.

It is peculiar that he should look so much the Spaniard, with his swarthy skin, his black mustache, dark eyes, gleaming teeth. For his most prominent single feature, the lantern jaw, is the very label of the Hapsburgs. It has come down through centuries from an early Polish alliance. One had such a grand underslung chin that he couldn't chew his food. Philip IV. had a beauty, and Velasquez painted it assiduously.

Alfonso's enemies are many and vocal. Enthusiasts for his person are hard to find these days. But when Spaniards foam at the mouth at the sight of those Bourbon-Hapsburg features, their diatribes are not what one would imagine—cretinism, degeneracy, debauchery. Unamuno and Blasco Ibanez, before he died, waxed lurid, but the very intensity of their hatred was complimentary. Explaining the enormity of his assaults, Unamuno has said: "You can't tickle a rhinoceros with feathers." But they will all admit that the king is terribly clever, the best practical politician in Spain.

The King Reigns.

But why this hatred? Why is the throne of the first real king vouchsafed Spain in a century and a half in danger?

Go back a little.

Act One, "The King Reigns."

He was born a king, but only in 1902 did he come of age.

On the morning of May 17 Madrid is in fever. The sun shines. The crowd, massed to watch the great court carriages rumble by, is jubilant. A new king, young, healthy, eager, is to be crowned. The colonies are gone, an episode four centuries long terminated ingloriously, but Spain is to rise from her ruins, a modern European state. Twenty-six years of constitution already. The era of pronunciamentoes past. Carlism, even republicanism, lost causes.

"I swear by the Lord on the Holy Gospels that I will observe the constitution and the laws. If I do so, let God reward me; and if I do not, let Him call me to account."

Only 15, and so, naturally anxious to start reigning right away, he calls his first cabinet meeting. Over the protests of his ministers, who are hot and weary in their grand court uniforms.

He jumps into his reign with both feet. The Count of Romanones, who was present, has just revealed in a new book what happened.

Why, the young king asks Gen. Weyler, of Cuban fame, minister of war, have the military academies been closed?

Because there are too many officers, Majesty.

Young majesty is not convinced. Solicitous for his officers from the start, he thinks the academies should be reopened. He wins.

And then, to everybody's surprise, he announces peremptorily that he reserves strictly to himself his constitutional right of granting all titles and decorations.

Not liking the sound of this, the Duke of Veragua, descendant of Columbus and minister of marine, speaks up. The young king glares while he reads a passage from the constitution: no order from the king is valid without the signature of a minister.

Romanones says the prime minister, old Sagasta, was too tired and hot to back up Veragua in this first lesson, and that anyway he didn't care about decorations.

"And so," says Romanones, who still loves his king, "if the day hadn't been so hot perhaps the fate of the constitution might have been different. 'Train up a child . . .'"

Suspicious of Him.

Sept. 13, 1923, sees the end. Pronunciamiento in the old style. Coup d'état.

From the very first day the politicians had been suspicious. "He is Ferdinand VII. and worse," said Maura in a bitter moment. Maura has just been made a duke posthumously. One son, the duke, remains faithful to the crown. Another has gone republican.

Why were they so suspicious? Osorio y Gallardo, who is Catholic and monarchist and yet demands the king's abdication, sums it up mildly.

"The monarchy, once restored, strengthened itself by the abuse of the system of alternation of parties, the two which alone had the constitutional right to govern. Later the monarchy began to meddle in the internal affairs of the two parties, stimulating the appetites and ambitions of men in the ranks at the expense of legitimate party chiefs and public interest."

The Spanish parliamentary system was purposely designed wrong and by a pair of statesmen anxious to keep the power in their hands. The king picks the prime minister without regard to public opinion and turns over to him the machinery of the Gobernacion to "make the elections." Fatal phrase. The support which in most constitutional régimes would have been prerequisite to his choice he ther works up through the caciques and phoney elections, giving only the illusion of democratic government. Fine for the politicians of the two dynastic parties when they had agreed to alternate and the king is in hand. The king was thus the source of power, not the people, and it did not take Alfonso long to assert himself.

He rode high. As early as 1901 he was able to force the resignation of Maura at a critical moment in the Franco-Spanish-Morrocan negotiations, merely to assure the appointment of a favorite general as chief of staff.

But as late as 1913 the king was the nation's idol. His nerve, his triumphs in practical politics were appreciated like exploits in the bullring. The discomfiture of the politicos worsted at their own game was enjoyed. The men in the street talked admiringly of the king's "left hand." It is with the left hand that the espada tricks the bull just before the kill. Craftiness is the high virtue in Spain.

The king used his "left hand" to the limit. Many think now, thought all along, that had there been a statesman instead of a politician on the throne he might have used his power to dig himself in by strengthening the two dynastic parties and turning them to the essential task of developing an electorate before the electorate developed in its own way.

But Alfonso preferred other tactics. He was victor in countless political skirmishes. Too smart for them all. But the results were the further inversion of power, the hopeless splitting of the two dynastic parties—there were 20 groups in the last parliaments—and the final breakdown of the whole system of the Bourbon Restoration. Its complete divorce from reality.

The king's allies, church and army, waxed fat and arrogant, and inevitably they became in a sense his masters.

The Revolution's Start.

In 1917 came the rebellious assembly in Barcelona of deputies clamoring for free national elections and the revolutionary strike, which made anything but intervention by the army impossible. One might not be wrong in dating the revolution from that year instead of 1923. From then on the constitution was suspended most of the time. The army having arrived on the scene never left it again for long. The politicos showed occasional outbursts of talent. But the only realities any more were force. Had they been supermen it is doubtful if they could have headed off the chaos from the imminence of which the army, as much to blame as the others, "saved" the country in 1923.

There is another angle. In 1919 Maura lost his reputation in trying, but failing to make himself a majority in the elections. In 1922 five Socialists were elected in Madrid. The parliamentary system was ceasing to be a sham. The army knocked what was left of it in the head.

The coup d'état came just seven days before the parliamentary committee on responsibilities was to have reported on the annual disaster in Morocco in 1921, when in one day Spain lost 25,000 men and all the territory she had won since 1909 at the cost of 13,000 men a year.

Gen. Silvestre committed suicide, but the committee, it is now well known, was about to lay blame higher up. Silvestre had gone over the head of his commander, Berenguer, over the head of the minister of war. He had been in touch with the king and had an encouraging wire from him on the eve of the holocaust. Alfonso had the rotten luck to have been in Deauville when this wire was sent. Indalecio Prieto, a Socialist member of the committee, had called the king a canaille. The first act of the dictator was to seize the committee's files. It is not thought, though, that they have been destroyed.

On the afternoon of the coup d'état one Santiago Alba, minister of foreign affairs, flees for France, not at all sure that his king will protect him against the triumphant soldiery. Primo de Rivera had proclaimed him a "depraved and cynical minister." There was need to show the nation that the real villains were the politicos.

The King Rules.

Act 2. "The King Rules."

Of course, every effort was made to give the impression that it was Primo de Rivera, and at times it undoubtedly was.

But on Nov. 13, 1923, Romanones and Melquiadies Alvarez, as presidents of senate and chamber, call at the palace to remind the sovereign of his constitutional obligation to convoke the cortes within three months of its dissolution.

They are back in the street in five minutes. Is there any doubt who willed the dictatorship?

Primo de Rivera pokes fun at the two crestfallen politicos. The nation laughs uproariously, willing for a time to accept a simple explanation of all the ills of Spain. Some time elapses before one begins to hear the ditty about how "to clean the dungpile we get a broom that is dirtier still."

In the summer of 1926, after the artillery revolt, Sanchez Guerra, the Conservative leader, calls at San Sebastian to warn the king, in the name of a group for the elder statesmen, against calling Primo's projected national assembly. They will forgive, accept what has transpired thus far as necessary and maybe salutary, but to call the assembly means the last of the constitution and they must consider if he calls it that he is casting the die for absolutism.

The king is resolute. The assembly is called. Not for nothing did he break his oath. He and his dictator are transforming the body of old Spain. His rule if not his reign will go down in history with the great ones.

A Bourbon Trick.

But in 1929 it is a question of finally supplanting the constitution of 1876 with a new one. Primo wants it badly. The king balks, fearful now of burning the last bridge left behind him. Primo has nothing as respectable even as fascism in Italy to substitute. He is beginning to look more and more just like another general in the nineteenth century tradition. Not a Mussolini at all. He is making one mistake after another. The peseta is falling. There are scandals. Nasty ones. Guerra meant what he said and has led an abortive revolution. New conspiracies daily. Public opinion, smothered under censorship for years, restive. Worst of all, the army going Republican. And the king's popularity almost done for. He doesn't dare put his nose in a university any more.

Just to make sure, back in 1928 Alfonso had got one Gen. Berenguer out of prison in Fontarabia and made him chief of his military household.

"He will play no Bourbon tricks on me," Primo had spluttered then to his friends.

But in February, 1930, Alfonso dismisses his dictator and calls a new one. Which looks very much like that "Bourbon trick." To save his skin, it must be admitted. And to Berenguer, just the man, smooth and tactful, he needed, he confides the delicate task of restoring the burnt and damaged bridges back to constitutional felicity. Riots. Danger lies that way.

Now Gregorian Chants May Be Heard on Disks

French Monks' Recording Surprisingly Good.

By Edward Moore.
[Tribune Music Critic.]

ONE of the most important contributions to the musical knowledge of the world ever made by a recording company, important because so little is known of it outside of its active practitioners, comes from Victor this month. It is a collection of Gregorian chants, twelve double-faced disks, sung by the choir of monks in the abbey of Saint-Pierre de Solesmes, France, under the direction of Dom Joseph Gajard, O. S. B. [Musical Masterpiece series, Album M-87].

The abbey itself is of great historical interest. A Benedictine monastery, founded in the year 1010, located near Sablé, France, several times pillaged, once nearly destroyed, restored and added to from time to time, its members within the last century have given enormously valuable service to the Catholic church and to music in general through their research into liturgical music. So well were they recognized that in the Motu Proprio of April 25, 1904, Pope Pius X entrusted the preparation of an official edition of Gregorian chants to the monks of Solesmes.

The present collection was made in the abbey, not in the least in a professional manner but by the whole choir as they sing in the services. From a technical standpoint they are surprisingly good. At times one detects a slight echo, but in general the phrasing is as clear and the words as distinct as though they had been recorded by the strictest laboratory methods.

It is difficult to put upon paper just how Gregorian chants sound, quite as difficult as to tell how any other music sounds. They are songs, they are sung prayers, they are lines of melody entirely without accompaniment, and they are modal. The last means that the melodies, instead of being confined to the notes from C to C, as in our modern major, or from A to A, as in minor, make use of no less than eight scales, or modes, D to D, E to E, and so on. The only chromatic alteration permitted is that under certain circumstances the Si, the B of our scale, may be flattened. Upon first hearing one comes to believe that the rhythm is more or less the rhythm of the spoken Latin words, but Fr. Gajard insists that this is not the case, that the rhythm, though not cut into measures, is truly musical and based upon subtle, but definite and precise principles.

Impressive and Noble.

Considered as music, though it is at times difficult to dissociate the music from the prayer, they are curiously impressive and noble. Not in the least dramatic or sentimental or romantic in character, they are serene and dignified in the highest degree, a high, perhaps the highest form of art that the world has ever known.

An explanatory booklet written by Fr. Gajard gives a detailed account of the theory of Gregorian music in general and its practice as exemplified in the separate records. With the booklet and the records, one learns more about the Gregorian system in a few hours than would be possible by reading many volumes on the subject.

In this connection it is both instructive and interesting to make comparison with another example of liturgical music, again of a high type but of quite different manner. Brunswick sends out four sides of excerpts from the St. Matthew's Passion by Johann Sebastian Bach, recorded in Europe by the Bruno Kittel choir and the Philharmonic orchestra of Berlin, Germany, Bruno Kittel conducting. In one section there are solo and duet passages by Lotte Leonard, soprano, and Emmi Leisner, contralto. [Nos. 90,090 and 90,091].

Here was a mighty master of music who conceived religious works in terms of solid choral masses, in plaintive hymns, in arabesques and tendrils of melody that creep and curl and bend decoratively about and through a moving mass of tone. Again it is desirable to note a case of excellent recording; again, as in the case of the Gregorian chants, one finds music of another era which is entirely vital in this one, and which consequently can be nothing else than the product of great genius.

In Lighter Vein.

Passing to light music, it would seem as though the dance records were due to be more or less affected by the discovery of the new product called durium. This is a synthetic rosin process, discovered in the search for a composition suitable for making newspaper matrices, but first turned to the making of records. They are as light as cardboard, flexible and shatterproof. Also, they retail for 15 cents.

The Durium Products corporation issues the "hit of the week" dance record once a week, the hit being selected by a jury composed of Flo Ziegfeld, Eddie Cantor, and Vincent Lopez. Two have reached this deck within the last few days, No. 1,091, "Go Home and Tell Your Mother," fox trot by the Don Voorhees orchestra, and No. 1105, "When the Organ Played at Twilight," Fiorito's music with Lew White, organist.

Other light music, briefly mentioned, follows:

Brunswick fox trots—

4398—"I'm Yours," from the film, "Leave It to Lester" and "Confessin'"; also 4399—"Lisa Lee" and "Tomorrow Is Another Day," from the film, "Big Boy," both by Ben Bernie and his orchestra.

4922—"Something to Remember You By" and "Body and Soul," from "[illegible]ree's a Crowd." Also 4897—"I Still Get a Thrill" and "I Don't Mind Walkin' in the Rain," both by Ozzie Nelson and his orchestra.

4877—"Peg o' My Heart" and "China Boy," by Red Nichols and His Five Pennies.

For Dancing Feet.

Victor dance records:

22537—"Body and Soul" and "Something to Remember You By," by Reisman's orchestra.

22526—"Moonlight on the Colorado" and "Don't Tell Her," by the Shilkret-Victor orchestra.

22521—"One More Waltz" and "Until We Meet Again, Sweetheart," by Fiorito's orchestra.

22617—"Shine On, Harvest Moon" and "Memories," by the Southerners.

22525—"Sittin' on a Rainbow," by Johnson's orchestra, and "In My Heart It's You," by Cummins' orchestra.

Columbia dance records:

2297-D—"Body and Soul" and "Something to Remember You By"; also 2289-D—"A Big Bouquet for You" and "In My Heart It's You," both by Paul Whiteman and his orchestra.

2236-D—"I Still Get a Thrill" and "Just a Little Dance, Mam'selle," by Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians.

2302-D—"Gospel Train" and "Is There a Place Up There for Me?" by Paul Tremaine and his orchestra.

2292-D—"I'll Be Blue, Just Thinking of You" and "Maybe It's Love," by Bert Lown and his Hotel Biltmore orchestra.

Vocalion foreign:

8357—"La Barca" and "Mi Concha," vocal duets with guitar, by Hermanos Banuelos.

Voice of the Fan

Finds Lukas Marvelous.

Dear Miss Tinée: Just want to compliment you on your attention to Paul Lukas in your criticism of "Anybody's Woman."

He was marvelous and made our "Clive" anything but outstanding in the picture.

I believe you think as I do, that the parts should have well been reversed, for was there even one small moment when Neil Dunlap made himself attractive in the least?

"Falling in love with him" was the inconsistency of the picture and a serious one in this otherwise three star one.

As usual, you were right.

Sincerely, E. K. S.

Editor's note—So nice to know we think alike!

Plea for Monthly Silent.

Dear Miss Tinée: While reading all the pros and cons about silent and talking pictures in your most interesting columns I hit upon this idea:

Why couldn't a de luxe theater have, once a month, a new silent picture? Since practically all producers make silent prints, this could easily be arranged. Then all the people who prefer silents could have at least one treat each month, with fine organ accompaniment and a wonderful symphony orchestra.

What do you think?

Yours sincerely,

ROSS BECKHAM.

Editor's note—I think I'll print this and let the theater management think.

My Best Joke

What is the best joke you ever heard? Address Best Jokes Editor, The Tribune.

As an Afterthought.

A lifeguard at a Los Angeles beach received this note a short time ago:

Dear Sir: My husband's bathing suit was washed away yesterday morning by the tide. Please do your best to find it. Mrs. J. P. NEWBERRY.

P. S.—My husband was in it. A. D

UGLY SKIN

Blemishes clear right up while you sleep

Even though costly salves and fancy ointments have failed to make your skin lovely and clear don't give up in despair.

If you're tormented with pimples, rash, blackheads or unsightly red spots on your skin, just anoint the infected areas with Rowles Mentho Sulphur. And while you sleep blemishes will disappear. Your skin will clear up in a surprisingly short time and soon regain its lost beauty.

This ointment, which is the color of skin, contains the 3 valuable ingredients that heal, cleanse and smooth the skin. That's why it's so very effective.

Now if you're bothered with skin blemishes get a small jar of Rowles Mentho Sulphur from your druggist. Use it freely. Leading authorities recommend this ointment for clearing up the skin and keeping it beautiful.

Two Assembly Balls Listed; Invitations Already Out

By Mlle. X.

DAME RUMOR is certainly a treacherous jade. Less than a fortnight ago she whispered to a few trusting souls that she'd heard there might be no Assemblies this winter, and that the money spent for these annual and extremely fashionable balls would be given to charity.

As a matter of fact, it was just about that time that the august board of governors for the Assemblies met to go over the lists and get the invitations ready for the engravers. The bids were in the mail last week, by the way, as those of you know who were so fortunate as to receive them. The men on the board number among their ranks many of our best known citizens, socially and financially speaking, and I have it on good authority that they never considered the idea of not having their two parties. They feel that the wise and important thing to do just now is to keep money in circulation—to spend and to give as liberally as possible, thereby helping both employed and unemployed.

Exclusive Festivities.

The Assemblies, given each season on the first Friday in December and the second in January, are the most exclusive of our winter festivities. To be "on the list" is a hallmark of social distinction, just as in the case of the Philadelphia Assemblies, and has been so for more than a generation. It was in the late seventies as soon as Chicago had sufficiently recovered from the fire to think about enjoying herself, that the seeds of the present institution were sown.

At that time a group of the young beaux of the town—among the leaders were the late William P. Conger, Harry King, and Arthur and Edward L. Ryerson—banded together to entertain their friends. Eager to express their appreciation of the many hospitalities offered them during the year, they issued invitations to two balls. Those first delightful affairs, known as the "Cinders," were held, I'm told, on the north side at Martine's hall, Martine being the fashionable dancing master of the day. To them came, besides the members of Chicago's beau monde, a certain trio of smart young Milwaukee gallants who added much to the gayety of the occasion—Capt Houston and the two Cramers, "Liff" and Frank.

Times change. The "Cinders" grew and developed into the Assemblies. Most of the men who founded the precedent have gone. Other men carry on the cherished traditions of those early years, mindful of the standards by which they were first measured. It's pretty unanimously agreed that many of the old social barriers have been broken down in the past decade or so, but it looks as if the Assemblies might survive the most determined attack, even unto the third and fourth generations.

Potential Dianas.

Speaking of determined attacks, I rather imagine the whole feathered tribe of ducks is wondering what on earth has happened in shooting circles this autumn. Time was when practically all the blinds in our good duck country were reserved for the men, but this year there's been a definite feminine invasion of the territory, and the crack shots of the community are by no means limited to the masculine contingent. Many a plump bird gracing a fashionable dinner table was brought down by one of the ladies—God bless 'em!—who's as modest over her achievement as she was zealous in her efforts to get her mallard.

Ever since the traps opened last month, out at the Onwentsia club, there's been an industrious little group of potential Dianas, practicing for an hour or so each day in preparation for the excitements of the open season. Among the enthusiasts are Mrs. T. Philip Swift, Mrs. Jay Morse Ely [who's been visiting here for the last few weeks, by the bye]; Mrs. Mason Phelps, Mrs. Lester Armour, Mrs. Russell Kelley, Mrs. George F. McLaughlin, Mrs. Clifford Rodman and Mrs. Farley Hopkins.

Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins have a place in southern Illinois where they spend many a week-end at this time of year, taking down with them groups of friends who are as keen about the sport as they. A recent house party included the Kelleys, the Rodmans and the McLaughlins, and I hear there was no end of good natured rivalry as to whether the men or the women were the better shots. The Elys also have a shooting place in the south, where they are hosts to many of their long time Chicago friends during the duck season.

Going in for Careers.

As to other feminine enterprises of the moment, I don't remember a winter when so many members of the fair sex, both young and older, were going in so wholeheartedly for careers. Politics, interior decorating, philanthropy, writing, teaching, art, music and the stage claim their interest, not merely as occupation for a few idle hours but as undertakings that mean the giving up of all sorts of pleasant frivolities.

Joan Williams, the daughter of Norman Williams and the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Chalmers, is teaching riding at the Foxcroft school in Virginia, where the A. A. Spragues' ambitious youngster, Laura, is also an instructor. Pretty Mary Frost, the daughter of the Donald Frosts and the granddaughter of Mrs. E. L. Ryerson, made her bow to society last year in Boston, and is devoting much of this, her second winter out, to the study of interior decorating. In the same field in our own city are Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Howard Linn, Mrs. John Hamline, Mrs. Philip Maher and Lydia Lee [Mrs. John N. Lee], the last two having opened new shops here this fall, the former in town and the latter in Lake Forest.

Mrs. James Herbert Mitchell, whose second novel is about to make an appearance, has been doing a bit of writing herself. Her first book, "Mrs. Mitchell's Daughter," was published in 1927, and was followed by "Mrs. Mitchell's Son" in 1928. Her husband is a well known Chicago lawyer.

WHEN CHICAGO WAS YOUNG

By Herma Clark.

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend, Julia Boyd of New York.

Chicago, March 31, 1875.

DEAR Julia:

Easter is past and the pressure of social affairs is beginning again. I am tired tonight, for I have had a seamstress here, getting our clothes in order for the spring season. I have had a lovely dress made for Martha Jr. It is of soft peacock blue wool, trimmed with matching silk, with a velvet underskirt of deeper blue. It has a basque, of course, with a peplum, and the apron overskirt is caught up at the back with a sash.

Her hat, worn with this, follows the new mode and is trimmed with long streamers hanging down behind. The knot of ribbon is caught with a small bird. Will thinks the present day fashions are ridiculous, especially one he has seen, a hat on which a bird's claw [natural] holds a loop of ribbon. He claims to have seen an oyster shell performing the same office, and he suggests several other objects which milliners might use, such as a hen coop, a bird cage, and a ham bone!

Will's Easter present to me was a parasol with a small opera glass in the handle, which can be unscrewed when needed. It was very expensive, I'm sorry to say. I wouldn't have him know it, but there are a dozen things I'd have liked better. Poor dear! He meant well, though that's an awful thing to say about any one, I know.

This week is full. We are to see Lawrence Barrett in "Richelieu" tomorrow night. On Friday comes the ball to benefit the Woman's hospital, given at Bournique's. Several of our friends are interested in that institution—Mrs. Stewart Spaulding, Mrs. Archie McBean, Mrs. William A. Fuller, Mrs. Uri Balcom, and Mrs. Luther Stone—and we want to show our sympathy with the enterprise.

We have been reading aloud R. D. Blackmore's "Lorna Doone," not so new a book, for it was published in 1865, but I hadn't happened to read it before. It is really a masterpiece, and I think you would like it. I begrudge the time spent on most novels, but this is well worth reading. I found one of Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth's books in Martha's room lately. Such trash, it seems to me. Not every one thinks so, of course. I even saw quite a favorable review of this very one in one of our household magazines.

Mother gave Martha a new one of the "Elsie" books for Easter, "Elsie's Womanhood," and Martha thinks it terribly dull. I never fancied the series myself, for the heroine is so impossibly good. Miss Alcott's are different. Her heroines are real young people, with the joys and sorrows that present day young folks have.

Speaking of Miss Alcott reminds me to tell you that we heard her father, Bronson Alcott, speak recently out in Evanston at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Harbert. Mrs. Edwin Lee Brown assisted in receiving the guests. Mr. Alcott is so unworldly in his philosophy that we smiled, as we drove home, at the innocent pride he showed when he told the audience, in speaking of his subject, "New England Authors," that his daughter, Louisa, received $2,000 for the serial story now running in St. Nicholas.

April 3.

This letter has remained unfinished for more than a week. Now, I will add a few lines and send it. We have just returned from the Judd-Gould wedding, which was so lovely I want to tell you a little about it. Miss Minnie Judd, the bride, is the daughter of one of Chicago's distinguished citizens, Norman B. Judd. He nominated Lincoln for the presidency at the Wigwam here in Chicago, and was sent by Lincoln as minister to Prussia. He is now collector of the port of Chicago.

The Judds have a handsome estate at Woodlawn avenue and 47th street, where the wedding was celebrated. The house was lavishly decorated with hothouse flowers and the dining table had such a centerpiece as I have never seen before. It was four feet high and composed of tea roses, waxy calla lilies, camellias, carnations, hyacinths, and smaller blossoms.

With Mr. Judd's political and legal affiliations, there were many public men represented either personally or by gifts, and it was a privilege to be there. Among the ushers were two of Will's friends, Albert Keep and Arthur Caton, and the bridesmaids, lovely girls, were Miss Williams, Miss Waldron, Miss Caton, Miss Rossiter, Miss Gould [the groom's sister of Seneca Falls, N. Y.], and Miss Skinner. The groom is a well known business man of Seneca Falls and a splendid sort of person, we hear. Will laughed at a newspaper paragraph which re-

Morrises Honor Infanta Beatrice at Paris Luncheon

By May Birkhead.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS. — [Special.] — Many Chicagoans are giving or receiving hospitality at the moment in the Ville Lumiere. Among them are Ira Nelson Morris, former American ambassador to Sweden, and his wife, who have just been to Spain, where they were the guests of the Infante Alfonso and the Infanta Beatrice. The latter has just arrived here to be the guest of the Morrises at the Ritz for several weeks.

It will be remembered that the Infanta Beatrice is the sister of Dowager Queen Marie of Rumania, who on several occasions has entertained Mr. and Mrs. Morris at the palace in Bucharest.

Mr. Morris and his wife gave a luncheon in honor of the infanta and their other guests, including Count Wachtemister of the Swedish embassy and his American wife, the former Beulah Cooper Hubbell. The Morrises will leave late in November for a visit to Sweden.

Ganna Walska Hostess.

Another big party this week was a luncheon given by Ganna Walska in honor of the maharajah of Putalla, who is on his way to London as a delegate to the forthcoming round table conference. Other guests included the Brazilian ambassador, the Egyptian minister to France and his wife; Philippe Berthelot, permanent secretary of the French foreign office, and his wife; Baron Villani of Hungary, Baron Maurice de Rothschild, Mrs. Henry Symes Lehr, Walter Straram, Countess Vallombrossa and the Egyptian nobleman, Sabbag Bey.

Walter Jahn and wife, who have spent the last year visiting the orient and Africa and who have been in Paris for the last few weeks, sailed to go directly to Chicago.

An Improvement.

The autumn salon is attracting many of our countrymen among its visitors. This exhibition of art is not what it used to be. In former years this show was seething with revolt and general cussedness while now it assembles an array of canvases whose subjects almost without exception are recognizable. Those pictures which resembled skyscrapers hit by an earthquake have done a fadeout. There are no more autobuses which resemble the aurora borealis and violins scarcely distinguishable from a vacuum cleaner. The salon has many points of interest, and aside from paintings there are bits of sculpture, including a marble bust of Mme. Mary Coste,

Fanfare Greets Bernadottes on Visit to Gotham

Manvilles Honor Return with Huge Parties.

By Nancy Randolph.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—[Special.]—When I regard the fuss that is being made over the Count and Countess Folke Bernadotte I wonder just what Mrs. Jacques Balsan, the erstwhile duchess of Marlborough, and the duchess of Roxeburghe must think.

After all is said and done there are no end of American women who have married into the foreign nobility. Once upon a time an American duchess, wearing British strawberry leaves in her coronet, was enough to make all of society sit up and take notice—but those days are gone forever.

There are many American born noblewomen who come and go so quietly—Viscountess Esher, now in this country; Lady Ribblesdale, quietly in residence on Long Island; Viscountess Furness, Princess Obolensky, the duchess of Manchester that was, the duchess of Roxeburghe that is, and the erstwhile duchess of Marlborough.

When they come to visit the scene of their birth there is little or no fanfare—but the Bernadottes! Such a beating of drums and flourish of trumpets! And Folke the cousin of a king whose line dates back only to that excellent marshal of France—Bernadotte.

Financial Recognition.

The reason is that New York society of today recognizes money. There isn't any doubt of that. The H. Edward Manvilles, parents of the countess, have oodles of tin. Their home at Pleasantville, N. Y., where the marriage of the one time Estelle Manville and Folke Bernadotte took place, has, believe it or not, solid gold doorknobs—or at least they struck me as being such. Hiesmaro, the name shared by both the Pleasantville mansion and the Manville yacht, means millions to Gotham society and nothing else.

Now that the Bernadottes are in town, part of society can look forward to a good time. The Manvilles are never stingy in their entertaining. There will be huge parties for weekends at Pleasantville, big parties at Pierre's before the opera, and a splurge in the Manville box all during the horse show, their Thursday entrance having been excellently staged.

Hiram Manville—that is what the H. stands for—is an excellent old lad, and Young H. Edward did nicely by the family in marrying Ethel Schneidwind. Folke, as cousin of the king, has the chance of being a king himself some day, which makes the young Count Bernadotte, their child, a person of importance, but, after all, the meat of the situation and the pearance; Mrs. Carter Harrison, whose novel "The Scarlet Riders," has recently done so; Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Mrs. Cecil Barnes, and Mrs. Graham Aldis are only a few of our leading literary lights. Janet Fairbank Jr. has been living in Germany since last spring, pursuing her musical studies and doing some concert work, as has Mrs. Livingston Fairbank in Paris. Florence Noyes has set up her easel in her charming new studio in the penthouse whither her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Noyes, moved last month. Dolly Hamill, daughter of the Robert Hamills of Hinsdale, is an authority on the value of old books, and is getting ready for her annual sale of rare old volumes, while her oldest sister, Katharine, is deep in politics, and her second sister, Emily, has only just given up a fine dramatic career in favor of matrimony, her engagement to Fifield Workum of New York having been announced last Monday and her wedding being scheduled for this winter.

Praise for Junior League.

To all those talented and hard working Junior leaguers who contribute so much to the success of the annual children's theater a rising vote of thanks ought to be given for their first offering of the season, a capital presentation of Maeterlinck's immortal "The Blue Bird." It's so lovely that it brings tears to the eyes of the most calloused theatergoer in the audience, and so gay and amusing that there's a steady ripple of glee from the youngsters who flock to the Selwyn each Saturday morning.

The performance is elaborate for an amateur production—but then, those clever girls are almost professional by now!—with nine scenes and more than thirty players. Mrs. Charles Lindsey III. and Miss Marguerite Foster designed the charming settings and many of the costumes. Mrs. Shreve Badger, Martha Fitts and Meredith Hanley also had a hand in the latter, and Helen Rend is responsible for several of the delightful bits of music used during the three acts.

To mention every one in the cast, and they all deserve it, would use up far more space than this column is allowed, but a few of the highlights of the play include Mary Louise Marshall as Tylo, the dog; Florence Morrison as Tylette, the cat; Lenore Macleish and Helen Gambrill as Graffer and Granny Tyl; Doris Winterbotham in the rôle of Tyltyl, and Peggy Hambleton as Mytyl, his sister; Catherine Drake as Sugar, with her peppermint stick fingers, and Emily Pope as "Cold in the Head."

Lecture on Chinese Painting.

On Wednesday afternoon of the coming week Mrs. John Paul Welling, Mrs. George T. Langhorne, Mrs. Charles W. Dempster and Mrs. Waller Borden will be hostesses for the American Friends of China at a lecture on Chinese painting to be given at the Casino by that eminent oriental artist, Teng Kwei of Suchow.

Mr. Teng, now a research fellow for Harvard, is in this country to study European art, and has come to Chicago as a friend and protegé of Dr. Berthold Laufer of the Field museum. He will illustrate his talk by a demonstration of painting in the Chinese manner and by lantern slides, as well as by a display of his own work.

Last Monday the Renaissance society of the University of Chicago invited its members and the American Friends of China to a reception in Wieboldt hall to meet the Chinese consul general, Dr. Kollang Yih, Mr. Teng and Dr. Laufer, and to see an exhibit of the visiting artist's paintings.

A Charming Talk.

In spite of the fact that Mrs. John Alden Carpenter insist she's had no practice in public speaking, the talk she gave at the Casino Wednesday morning on the subject of interior decorating and under the auspices of the Lake Shore League of Women Voters was extremely gay and amusing. The setting was especially appropriate, since she is responsible for the charming color schemes and furnishings of the chic little club, and she interspersed her theories on modern decorating with pat little remarks that gave great zest to the morning's entertainment.

Among those gathered to hear her were Mrs. Howard Linn, Mrs. E. H. Hasler, Mrs. Charles Deering, Mrs. Chauncey McCormick, Mrs. Joseph Adams, Mrs. Henry Hollis, Mrs. C. M. Ely, Mrs. James W. Morisson, Mrs. Samuel T. Chase, Mrs. Charles W. Dempster, Mrs. George Packard, Mrs. Mitchell Follansbee, Mrs. James Weber Linn, Mrs. James W. Rogers, Mrs. C. E More, Mrs. C. H. Chadwick, and Mrs. George Dulany. Mrs. William G. Hibbard presided at the meeting.

The third and last of the three modernist series of Wednesday morning lectures sponsored by the L. S. L. W. V. will be given this week at the Arts club, where Frederic Bartlett is going to answer the question, "What is modern painting all about?"

Newport Colonists Take Active Part in Local Politics

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Many villas are to close this week, their occupants having remained in residence until after election day. Many took an active part in local politics, including Mrs. Paul Fitz Simmons, Mrs. John Nicholas Brown, Mrs. Snowden A. Fahnestock, Maude Wetmore, Mrs. Daniel B. Fearing, William Fitzhugh Whitehouse, and Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster.

Mrs. Guy Norman has closed her house and gone to Washington for the winter. Among those who have gone to New York are the Misses Wetmore, Mrs. Julian R. Sloan, Mr. and Mrs. Amos Tuck French Jr., who were with Mr. and Mrs. Donald O MacRae, and Mrs. Louis L. Lorillard.

ferred to the couple as a "perfect picture of connubial consonance." The society reporters of today just must employ large words. But if the writer meant that the young people are well matched, I think he isn't far wrong.

The dresses I saw were handsome. The bride wore white satin and her attendants were in white, too. Mrs. Judd, the bride's mother, who is one of mother's dear friends and such a brilliant woman, wore pearl colored silk with a black lace overskirt. Mrs. Judge Caton of Ottawa, Ill., wore black velvet with lace overskirt. Her diamonds were wonderful.

As for the presents, they were legion, pickle dishes predominating, with gravy ladles in abundance. There were some beautiful bronze ornaments, too. The Skinners, I noticed, gave a bronze Venus and the Mitchells of Milwaukee an Oedipus.

Among the guests I noticed the Franklin MacVeagha, Gilbert Rossiter [Mrs. Judd's brother], Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Farwell, Judge and Mrs. E. S. Williams, and Col. and Mrs. Fred Grant, who are here on a visit.

Aren't you pleased at the result of the vote in the British parliament on women suffrage [illegible] unmarried women the ballot]?

Though it failed, 152 to 197 isn't a bad showing. Good for Mr. Disraeli, who voted with the minority!

Much love from
Your old friend,
MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

Foot Notes.

The Judds have no descendants living in Chicago, but there are still old residents who remember Mrs. Norman B. Judd. By the writer of these letters, who met Mrs Judd in her last years, she is recalled as one of the most delightful persons possible to know. Her sister, Miss Rossiter, married a Russian, and Mrs. Judd's accounts of visits there, as well as experiences at the court of Prussia in the '60s, were worth hearing. Mrs. Luther Rossiter of Lake Forest is related by marriage to Mrs. Judd.

Miss Anne Giles of Chicago suggests a Tennyson couplet as in the spirit of this column and as a favorite of the last generation:

The tender grace of a day that is dead
Will never come back to me.

Thanks to Harriet Richards of Oak Park for a poem which will be used later. If you have a beloved verse from an old scrapbook appropriate to this column, or a song your mother used to sing, send it in to Harma Clark, care of THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE, Chicago.

At the Horse Show.

Speaking of the horse show reminds me that we are in the midst of the forty-fifth annual show right now. Once again the Garden is host to the equine nobility and once again it is being proved that no matter how many motors are sold they will never displace the horse in the hearts not only of society but of the public as well. The last few years the horse shows at the Garden have made money. What do you think of that?

This year, as usual, the international flavor is present. Six army teams of riders, from Germany, Ireland, Hungary, Sweden, Canada, and the United States, are competing for the coveted military trophy. Only the English are absent, and there has been quite a bit of comment on the fact that none of the guards regiments are represented.

Among those who attended on opening night were Mrs. David Wagstaff, Mrs. Amory L. Haskell, Mrs. Reginald W. Rives, Mrs. Terrell Van Ingen, Mr. and Mrs. George R. St. George, William Du Pont Jr., E. Victor Loew, Alfred B. Maclay, and T. Shaw Hall.

In speaking of nobility I am reminded that that somewhat amazing person the duke of Manchester is once again in our midst. "Kim," as the erstwhile husband of Helena Zimmerman is called, does not always move in the best circles of New York society. For a British duke he is rather more than catholic in his tastes and sometimes the question is whether the things his grace does are his choice or are thrust upon him. Speaking conservatively, one would hardly say that the rest of the peers of England who sport the strawberry leaves would choose old "Kim" as representative of themselves. But he does manage to have a lot of fun. And what fun!

Nobility to Wed.

The Russian colony is quite excited over the forthcoming marriage of Princess Anna Obolensky to Prince Troubetzkoy. The princess is the daughter of Prince and Princess Alexis Obolensky, her father being cousin to Serge Obolensky, who married Alice Astor.

Once upon a time there would have been months of fêtes when an Obolensky and a Troubetzkoy married, but not now. Anna's father teaches for a living and Prince Troubetzkoy is far from wealthy. In fact, the only one of the Obolensky clan who has done well is Serge, who got Alice Astor for himself when he was in London, a very young man with little wealth.

The Obolenskys live very quietly at Sutton place, but their apartment is the center of the Russian society. Of course, the Grand Duchess Marie isn't doing badly as a style adviser and other elegantiarum, but the rest of the members of the house of Romanoff and its court aren't exactly rolling in wealth. It's a hard time, too, for ex-nobles, but the marriage of Anna and Prince Troubetzkoy will be a gala time for the Russian colony.

I hear that Mrs. William Hayward is going to descend, with all her jewels, on Newport this coming summer. Report has it that she has already purchased Claradon court, the estate which the ill fated Harry Black purchased from Edward C. Knight and never occupied. Mrs. Black, I know, has no intention of occupying the place, which is situated between Beaulieu and Miramara, the home of Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton Rice. For some reason all its occupants and owners have been far from unhappy, but I believe that nothing will disturb Mrs. Hayward, who is certain to give a few entertainments that will make Newport sit up and take notice.

French Waiter to Get Ten Years' Back Tips

BORDEAUX. —(AP)— Maurice Escoubes wants ten years' back tips from the restaurant where he toted thousands of schooners of beer and he is in a fair way to get them.

Back in 1919 the big café changed from the tip system to that of adding 10 per cent to each customer's bill. The waiters were given wages instead of being paid by tips.

Escoubes registered his protest but went on carrying beer and now he has won a decision from the council that deals with wage disputes.

The council established the principle that if an employer charges a customer a service charge the money should go to those who render the service.

Many Functions Mark London's Little Season

King and Queen of Belgium Are Visitors.

LONDON.—[Special.] — London's little season, this year, is certainly going well. Like so many things, its success depends largely on the weather, which has been almost good enough to make up for the wretched summer. The prolonged rains followed by warm autumn, known here as St. Luke's summer, has given us the most vivid and unusual colorings in the trees and flowers. All London has had a gay and festive appearance.

There is also an unusual amount of formal and official entertaining for the dominion premiers and one might almost think from the number of luncheons, dinners and receptions that it was the court season instead of the winter season. The most important of the recent affairs was the reception given by the marchioness of Londonderry at Londonderry house. The reception was one of the largest possible in any private house and it took many suave attendants to stage-manage it correctly.

Lady Londonderry stood at the top of the big double staircase with the marquis at her side and her son, Lord Castlereagh, behind him. She was an impressive figure in black velvet against which her enormous stomacher of diamonds shone with great brilliance. She also wore a high diamond crown and large diamond earrings.

Among her guests were a number of Americans. The American ambassador and Mrs. Dawes were present and the earl and countess of Denbigh (who was Miss Katheleen Emmett of New York); Sir John and Lady Lavery, who wore a voluminuos gown of white tulle; Dr. and Mrs. Philip Franklin; H. Gordon Selfridge; the countess Beauchamp (who was Miss Betty Woods of Columbus, O.); Admiral of the Fleet and the Countess Beatty; the Marchioness Curzon of Kedleston; and Mr. and Mrs. Otto Kahn.

Working for Charity.

Mrs. Wellington Hay is at present active on the committee of the seven societies scheme. Seven charitable organizations are being aided by seven performances of "The Jealous Wife," and Mrs. Hay (the niece of Graham Taylor of Chicago Commons) is ardently pushing the performance, which will mean help to the Mothercraft Training society, of which the Duchess of York is the honorary chairman. The Hon. Diana Darling is taking part, and among those who are buying tickets are many men prominent in the legal world, and Lady Patricia Ramsay.

Mrs. Wellington Hay was receiving at a reception at the American Women's club with the president of the club, Mrs. Curtis Brown, recently. It was given in honor of the new members of the club, who seem to be rather more than usual this year. Many of the American business men and their wives have gone back to America to recoup after the debacle of the stock market. And this gives us a new crop of London-Americans.

At the same reception I saw Mrs. Amos Dean (Chicago) and Mrs. Henry Luning.

Mannequin Competition.

Lady Brittain is holding a mannequin competition in aid of a municipal charity in Londonderry house by the kind permission of the marchioness of Londonderry. The competitors represent various London constituencies and will be only amateurs; the gowns are made solely of British materials. Lady Lavery is to be one of the judges, along with Miss Marie Tempest, Lady Moira Combe, and Lady Melchett.

Lady Lavery thoroughly deserves a place on a judging committee of that sort as she herself makes nearly all the beautiful dresses she wears and she is known to be one of the best and most distinctively dressed women in London society. The marchioness of Londonderry will distribute the prizes which have been contributed by some of the best known London shops

Hostess to Royalty.

Lady Cynthia Mosley was hostess to the king and queen of the Belgians recently at an exclusive restaurant. The royal couple have been visiting the duke and duchess of Portland at Langwell, Caithness, where they have been doing a great deal of motoring and walking in the highlands, but no shooting. They are most popular with many of the smart set in England and when they are here they appreciate an easy and democratic hospitality which would astonish some of the other crowned heads of Europe.

That reminds me of a story I heard about the prince of Wales which is so much in the character of the man it must be true. It is well known that the prince entertains extensively and well at his bachelor home. But his dinners are always of such an informal and sociable character that they bear no trace of the impressiveness of a royal feast.

The prince was at a dinner party given lately by a rich and pompous peer. The meal was of a character well deserving the name Victorian and it was accompanied with all the stiltedness and pomposity the peer loved and thought necessary. Driving home afterwards with some friends the prince remarked, "I know now what it means to be entertained by royalty."

The prince himself has given three dinners lately to the dominion premiers. In each case there were one hundred guests invited to York house and the dinners were as informal as one could wish. One little gesture the prince never forgets is to have a small, exquisite bouquet of flowers at the place of each lady. Other things may change, but this little favor is never omitted from the table. Soon the prince is giving a similar dinner to the Indian delegates to the round table conference.

American Show at the Art Institute Disappoints Critic

"WINDOW," by Gustaf Dalstrom, awarded the Gold Medal in the annual exhibition of paintings and sculpture by members of the Chicago Society of Artists. This year the exhibit is hung in the new studio gallery in Diana court, Michigan Square building, a gallery that is under the direction of Increase Robinson. The exhibit has great variety. It is smaller than in other years, but perhaps that gives it an added interest. It will continue through Nov. 22.

Life, as the Artists Look at it Today—Including Those Who Take a Second Glance—Seems Clothed in Mediocre Hues.

By Eleanor Jewett.

ALREADY we are girding up our loins to enter into a maelstrom of mediocrity, which, in a way, is descriptive of what hangs in the Art institute under the sober name of the forty-third annual exhibition of American paintings and sculpture. There is in compensation a room of horrors which is a gem. No one can mistake it. Go through the first hall; enjoy the delicate exquisiteness of the "white room," and there you are. John Carroll's "Eugenie" is the pivot about which the others swing.

Knowing that a little over fifty per cent of these paintings are the result of deliberate invitation on the part of Art institute authorities, one is willing to wager that the room of horrors is practically one hundred per cent invited. One feels the urge to initiate Chicago into the sophistries of a less effete east. It is driven in on one that here is the result of systematic investigation on the part of authority with our good at heart. We in the middle west do not perhaps see all that is being done in New York. Possibly we lack some of the latest things from Paris. Our artists, possibly, are still constrained by some sense of the probable. Paintings with us, in most cases, should possess one or another virtue. Of course, there are exceptions to every rule, and a finger can be pointed at various Chicago achievements which to the uninitiate bear every mark of the latest sophistication that modernism has produced.

But, still, there remains the room of horrors. The horrors are mostly flat. They become immensely tedious under any sort of careful inspection, but when they first dawn upon you it must be conceded that they do something to you. Chiefly they force a damning epithet from your lips. "And if this is art," they wring from you, "then give me hand colored photographs." But, wait. I think we have these pictures a little wrong. We are seeing them under a misapprehension. They are here not because they are art, to which indeed they bear little resemblance, but they are here because for the moment they represent "le dernier cri," the latest pouf in painting.

Several Delightful Pictures.

In the rooms beyond are secreted several of the most delightful of pictures. Do not miss "Pasqualita," by Nicolai Fechin, nor "The Apple Woman," by Lilian Westcott Hale, nor "Silver Ball," by Abram Poole, nor "Girl of Samarkand," by Leon Gaspard.

One thing in fairness may be said about this exhibition. Only one canvas has been allowed each painter, so, although only 212 paintings are hanging, still we are seeing the way 212 artists look at life today, and that is always something. There have been exhibits when one man would have several pictures, thus limiting the number of men to be represented. If, besides fixing one painting to an individual, the Art institute would affix an asterisk or some other sign of distinction to those paintings which are the result of invitation we would know again where the Art institute authorities came in and where the jury stops.

Wait. A more thorough review of the catalogue gives two pictures to Sam Ostrowsky, to Waldo Peirce, to Ernest L. Blumenschein, to Francis Chapin, to Charles S. Chapman, to John E. Costigan, to Sidney E. Dickinson, to Jerry Farnsworth, to John R. Grabach, to Emil Holzhauer, to Leonore Smith Jerrems, to Emma Fordyce McRae, to Tunis Ponsen, to Millard Sheets, to Gerrit V. Sinclair, to Jacob Getlar Smith, to Francis Speight, to W. Lester Stevens, to Frederic Tellander, to Anthony Thieme, to Laura van Pappelendam, to Franklin Chenault Watkins, to Warren Wheelock, to Charles A. Willmovsky, and to Carl Wuermer.

So the extent of representation of current American art is lessened by the above doubling.

Question Prize Awards.

The prize awards have come in for their share of disparagement. No one can understand why the legs of the "Water-Carrier" by Heinz Warneke did not automatically debar her from any prize, much less the most important. No one can understand Louis Ritman's having been given the second important prize, $1,500, for "Jullien." Surely, surely the committee on paintings and sculpture rated her too high. But then, of course, the kindly hand of welcome put in such a tangible way is a cordial showing of hospitality to one coming across the bleak Atlantic.

And again, there are a number of questions going about as to the reason for hanging the more than a little vulgar "Charlotte" by J. Theodore Johnson in the place of honor, the center of the main wall in the first gallery. Decidedly she wears the same general atmosphere that dressed Gisbert's "Girl in Red," in the Chicago Artists exhibit last February. In generous apology it has been pointed out to the doubters that Mr. Johnson was merely repeating the curve of the sofaback in the curious position of Charlotte's knees. We think it would have been kinder to Charlotte to have put her on another sofa.

Coming down to brass tacks, had the jury given Paul Trebilcock's thoroughly delightful "Two Women" first prize and Nicolai Fechin's "Pasqualita" third prize, it would have made decisions which could readily have been appreciated by the public. The second prize might well have gone to Louis Kronberg's "Grupo Flamenco." Had he been visiting instructor this winter, who knows but what it would have?

In connection with this exhibit, a note from Ivan Le Lorraine Albright comes in suitably: "Kindly correct your error in your paper of Oct. 31—in article by Eleanor Jewett—on American exhibition—listing under prise paintings 'Portrait' by Ivan Le Lorraine Albright—as it appeared in your paper. It should read corrected: 'Fleeting Time Thou Hast Left Me Old,' by Ivan Le Lorraine Albright."

The painting by Mr. Albright won honorable mention. It was sent out in the announcement from the Art institute with the caption, "Portrait, by ——, Fleeting Time Thou Hast Left Me Old," and for lack of space the tail of the comet was removed. Due apology is here offered. On rereading the announcement it becomes apparent that the theme for this particular award was portraiture, so the word "portrait," as read out of its context, was a little misleading, the more so as Mr. Albright's picture could be ranked as a portrait and the title is slightly fantastic.

Like Exotic Butterflies.

The paintings by Louis Kronberg hanging in the Knoedler gallery are decorative and colorful. They are like a troop of exotic butterflies alighting on the walls to caress them with the beat of their painted wings. They deal with Paris and the dancing stage; with Spain and the dance. "Petite Colette" is a fascinating harmony of color, lit and centered by the delightful personality of the young girl herself. You must see it to drink to the full of its beauty; print is poor stuff to convey the shimmer of green and the shadow of rose.

"Dancer in White" and "La Petite Simonne" are foils. The one gives her challenge, the other responds: "As you will. For me, I care nossing!" Both are characteristic Kronberg paintings, replete with careful craftsmanship, beauty of tonal values and a nice feeling for composition. The "Osario" is superb and the "Spanish Dancer with Fan" [and magnificent lace head dress] is lovely. An interesting departure of the painter is to have set out series of incidents: Some of these deal with the ballet and others with Spanish life. They are all most attractive.

In the further room at Knoedler's there has been this week a group of recent portraits by Baroness Violet Beatrice Wenner. Baroness Wenner has an uncanny knack for getting a likeness. Her head of Mrs. Bertha Bauer is more than charming. Her larger portraits of Mr. Harold F. McCormick and Mr. William Randolph Hearst are excellent. It is amusing to consider her painting of the late Bishop Anderson, which one must take as a good likeness in view of her other portraits, with the portrait of the bishop as seen through the eyes of Salisbury, the English painter, now hanging in the Anderson galleries, not a block away.

Baroness Wenner presents the late Bishop Anderson as a comfortable, perhaps a little dowdy, kindly, comforting man. Salisbury shows him in the glory of his rich church robes, almost like a Sir Galahad, a magnificent presence, an inspired dreamer, but a man of action, too. One could worship Salisbury's bishop, but one could smoke a pipe with the bishop of the baroness.

Holds Annual Exhibit.

The Chicago Society of Artists is holding its annual exhibition of work by members in the Diana court gallery of which Increase Robinson is the director. It is an interesting exhibition. There are two invited pieces of work, one a painting and one sculpture, by two members whom death interrupted, Anthony Angarola is represented by "Blue Grotto, Capri," and Tennessee Mitchell Anderson by "Head."

The paintings on the whole are of no one classification. Macena Barton has made another of her generous motions with her portrait of Llewelyn Jones. It is a striking canvas. An excellent likeness, the little bizarre touches of green buttons and the jesting burst of sunshine in the yellow boutonniere may be used as adjuncts to the emphasis of temperament in Mr. Jones' character.

If you have no objection to the hush that falls before the camera clicks you will like the decorative effects in the Mexican market scene by Harold Schultz. The girls on horseback by Gregory Orloff are again just enough out of the normal to be very satisfying to the eye. "Grapes," a still life by George Melville Smith, is extremely nice. The "Vase of Flowers," by Felix Russmann is one of the most exquisite incidents in the room. "Violets," by Elise R. Donaldson possesses a silvery charm. The flat pattern and well thought out color in the abstraction by Clara MacGowan has a quiet beauty, rather intangible.

"Alligator," by Kathleen Blackshear, shows a little colored boy perched high against a background of evenly rolling meadows. No alligator appearing in the painting, we come to the conclusion that the boy's name is Alligator. As Mr. Smith said, in Tennessee they do queer things with names. He asked a proud darkey woman what she called her little girl who was gayly dancing around. "O, her," said the coal black mammy, "us jest calls her Hot Tea." Therefore, Alligator seems credible.

"Fish Houses," by Josephine L. Reichman has good, clear, brisk color to recommend it. Beatrice Levy is again present with "Little Square," another bright page from Corsica. Frances Foy has a magnificent thing in her "Still Life" and so has Raymond Kata in his swift, impressionistic modern line drawing of a beggar. "Reflection," by Camille Andrene has a clouded charm and is in great contrast to the vivid color and sure lines of Increase Robinson's impression of a rich western landscape.

The second annual exhibition by the Art Guild of Chicago is being held in the Galleries, Academy of Our Lady, 95th and Throop streets, under the directorship of Sister M. Stanisia.

New additions to the excellent modern exhibit in the Chester H. Johnson galleries, Fine Arts buildings, are the portrait of the composer, Chabrier, by Manet, and the magnificent painting of St. Francis, by El Greco.

The Arts club opened last Friday an exhibit of paintings by Renoir to continue through November.

The Hoosier Art gallery, 211 West Wacker drive, opened an exhibition of paintings by Guy Brown Wiser and Mrs. Blanche C. Bruce on Friday to run through Saturday, Nov. 22.

SUNBEAM'S BALL WILL BENEFIT POOR

Funds Realized from Annual Gala Affair Aid League in Helping City's Unfortunates.

By Roberta Nangle.

THE Sunbeam league has covered the town with bright posters announcing an international ball to be held on Saturday evening at the Stevens hotel. At the present time, with the unemployment situation to be grappled with, organizations sponsoring social affairs are particularly eager to let the public know that the funds realized by these gayeties are to benefit the deserving poor.

Even those balls and dinner-dances which have always been purely social are now taking on the aspect of philanthropic affairs, due to the Good Samaritan spirit with which the city is imbued. Hence, the Sunbeam league asks that this space be used to inform interested persons that the price of a ticket to the international ball will insure not only a pleasant three or four hours of dancing and sociability, but also the conscience-soothing sensation that comes from doing a kindly deed.

Extensive Program.

The league, composed of 300 active members, carries out an extensive program of philanthropic work each year. The wherewithal comes from membership dues, voluntary contributions and the proceeds from two annual affairs—a card party each spring and a ball during the winter. These two events constitute the league's only approach to the general public for assistance.

The organization's principal interest is the maintenance of kindergartens for sick and crippled children. It now conducts eight of these special schools. There are two at Cook County hospital, one at the Home for Convalescent Women and Children, one at the Martha Washington Home for Dependent Crippled Children, one at the Home for Destitute Crippled Children, one at Wesley Memorial hospital, and two pre-nursery schools at Spaulding Kindergarten center.

Kindergarten Service.

The league employs a trained instructor and also supplies equipment for each kindergarten. At Cook County hospital, where the largest of the kindergartens is conducted, a physiotherapy nurse is employed in addition to the instructor. The most pathetic cases are the tiny tots bound in plaster casts at the Home for Destitute Crippled Children. These little patients are the special pets of the league members and everything possible is done to brighten their days in the hospital.

Last year the league provided for 11,000 children. It also has donated funds to the Vocational Supervision league, the National Committee for Prevention of Blindness, the Juvenile Protective association, the Chicago Council of Social agencies, the Martha Washington home, the Infant Welfare society, the Service Council for Girls, and the Illinois Society for Prevention of Blindness. A special committee is delegated to give help to individual cases.

The present officers of the league are Mrs. Charles Sloan, president; Miss Virginia Erlandson, Mrs. Harry R. Morrow, and Mrs. James J. McKenna, vice presidents; Mrs. John R. Dewson, recording secretary; Miss Martha Murphy, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Carl H. Van Dinden, treasurer, and Mrs. Edmund R. Landis, chairman of arrangements.

Thieves Take Stones from Italian Bridge

FLORENCE, Italy. — (AP) — Preyed upon by nocturnal thieves, the Carrara bridge here has been seriously weakened by the removal of 200 carved cornice blocks.

The police, to whom the damage was reported by a local newspaper, estimated that at least a year's work was represented by the gaping holes in the undersides of the arches.

Each of the missing stones was estimated to weigh at least a thousand pounds, and local officials are mystified as to how their removal was effected.

Aim to Establish Good Will Among Nations.

By the Rev. John Evans.

RELIGIOUS implications of Armistice day will be recognized by religious bodies of various creeds Tuesday noon at the Chicago temple, Clark and Washington streets. According to announcements by the Rev. Ernest Bourner Allen, who will preside at the services, leading addresses will be given by Congressman Morton D. Hull, Past Commander David D. Shillinglaw of the Illinois division, American Legion, and Rabbi Solomon Freehof, K. A. M. temple.

Organizations coöperating in the service include the League of Nations association, the Conference of Jewish Women, the Chicago Church federation, the Chicago Urban league, Chicago Woman's Aid, Council of Jewish Women, Forum of the League of Women Voters, Northwest Side Study club, Sinai Temple sisterhood, Women's City club, Women's International club, and the Y. W. C. A.

The special committee in charge of arrangements was organized by the commission on world friendship of the Chicago Church federation. The committee has announced that the purpose of the meeting is to establish good will among nations as the ultimate basis of peace.

Dr. Allen declared that the churches are awakening to their responsibility for forwarding the cause of peace. Dr. Joshua Oden, pastor of the Irving Park Lutheran church, and the Rev. Albert L. Scott, pastor of the Lincoln Memorial [colored] Congregational church, will take part in the services.

North and west side churches of the Chicago district of the Central Northwest Methodist Episcopal conference are sponsoring a Standard Leadership Training school, the first to be held in this district. The school states its purpose as being an effort "to give to workers in the church and Sunday school a larger vision of their opportunity and a deeper sense of their responsibility. The hope to develop practical plans for work that will increase their effectiveness in the local church." The school will convene Tuesday evenings from Nov. 11 to Dec. 16, from 7:30 to 9:30 o'clock, at the Bethany church, Ashland and Winnemac avenues.

There will be a general assembly each week from 8:20 to 8:40 p. m., at which time short addresses will be given to the entire student body by well known speakers. There will be four regular courses open for registration. They include "The Principles of Teaching," course No. 2; "The Old Testament," No. 3; "Adolescent Materials and Methods," Nos. 52, 62, 72, and "Story Telling in Religious Education," No. 201. In addition, a coaching class for pastors will be sponsored. Registration for these classes should be made before the opening session Nov. 11. There is an incidental fee of one dollar for each registration. Dinner will be served on each night of the term for those who wish to come directly from their places of business.

The Rev. O. G. Sandberg and the Rev. William Nelson are managers of the school. Miss Ruth Norberg is secretary, Arthur Regnell, treasurer, and J. G. Holmgren in charge of local arrangements. The faculty of the school includes Dr. C. W. Longman, the Revs. O. E. Olson, Axel Pearson, William Nelson, Drs. Irwin G. Paulsen and C. G. Wallenius, and Miss Eva M. Hasserberg. Mrs. B. N. Olson, 6352 North Paulina street, Briargate 0278, is registrar, and all registrations should be made with her.

Because it is the first Standard Leadership Training school in the Chicago district, all efforts have been put forth to make it a successful venture. It is hoped that other districts in the conference will follow the action of this district and make plans for the establishment of other schools. The church needs leaders, not only of pulpit ability but of business administration, and the M. E. conference may well be called a "leader of religious education."

The Chicago Sunday Evening club, always on the lookout for new and interesting speakers, will present Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, a young Cleveland, O., rabbi. This will be Dr. Silver's first appearance before the Sunday Evening club. His subject for the evening is, "The One and Many."

At 7 o'clock the Commonwealth Edison post of the American Legion will hold a short commemorative exercise in view of the nearness of Armistice day. A drum and bugle corps, numbering 60, will take part in the services.

In the absence of Clifford W. Barnes, president of the club, Harry A. Wheeler, the vice president, will preside. John S. Broeksmit, a trustee of the club, will take part in the services. The informal Bible talk at 7:30 will be given by Dr. Ernest Bournier Allen, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational church of Oak Park.

The Women's association of the Rock River conference of the Methodist Episcopal church will hold its annual meeting Wednesday at the Chicago Temple, Clark and Washington streets. The meeting will begin at 9:30 in the morning and continue until 3:30 in the afternoon. Representatives from churches of Chicago and vicinity will be present, together with delegations from other districts in the conference. Dan B. Brummitt, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, will address the association on "Problems of Leadership." This announcement was made by Mrs. Allan H. Gregg, president of the association.

The regular meeting of the Cathedral Shelter guild will be held Monday, Nov. 10, at 12:30 p. m. There will be a business meeting at 2 p. m. The speaker for the occasion will be the Rev. John C. Evans.

WEDDED

MRS. ALBERT WOOD POTTS. [Toloff Photo.]

THE marriage of Miss Margaret Tilton Hack, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick C. Hack of Evanston, to Albert Wood Potts, son of William A. Potts of Pekin, Ill., took place on Oct. 30 at the residence of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Potts will reside in Pekin after Nov. 25.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES

This evening at 5 o'clock a banquet in memory of the Rev. Henry Wunder will be held at the Plaza hotel, North avenue and Clark street, under the auspices of First St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran church. Following the banquet a centennial song service will be organized under the direction of Walter Sassmannshausen of the Pilgrim Lutheran church.

The Rev. Wunder was pastor of the First St. Paul's from 1851 to 1913, and for the first three years of his pastorate was the only Lutheran pastor in Chicago. He was president of the Missouri Synod Lutheran church of Illinois, the highest office in the district. At the time of his death the Rev. Wunder was one of the few people living who had watched Chicago grow from a small village to the third largest metropolis in the world.

Prof. W. C. Kohn of River Forest and the Rev. A. Ulrich of La Grange will be the principal speakers of the occasion. J. J. Hattstadt, Henry Brandt, and G. A. Fleisher, the senior members of the congregation today, will be among those asked to give brief reminiscences. The Rev. Otto Schmidt of Cincinnati, O., will deliver the festival oration at the song service in the evening. The Rev. Schmidt is a grandson of St. Paul's first pastor. George W. Kuehl has been appointed chairman for the banquet arrangements, and Otto Koehueke will act in the capacity of toastmaster.

The fifth anniversary of the Inner Mission society of the United Lutheran church in the metropolitan area will be celebrated at special services this afternoon at 3 at the Wicker Park Lutheran church, North Hoyne and Le Moyne avenues. The society is devoted primarily to welfare work throughout the city. Among other activities, the society sponsors the Protestant chaplain, the Rev. John A. St. Clair, in the Veterans' hospital at Hines.

The society has more than 3,000 members drawn from the membership of 56 United Lutheran churches of Chicago. According to leaders, the Inner Mission has rendered extensive aid to unemployed during the present crisis. The services will be marked this afternoon by an historical address by the present of the society, the Rev. E. F. Valbrecht. The Rev. Pasquale R. De Carlo, Italian pastor for Chicago Presbyterians, will also speak.

Community observance of Armistice Sunday will occur tonight at the River Forest Sunday Evening club in the auditorium at Jackson and Quick avenues. Walter C. Rattray, commander of post No. 15, American Legion, will preside. The Rev. Harold Holt, rector Grace Episcopal church and chaplain of the post, will offer the invocation and benediction.

Frank Branch Riley, who was chosen to deliver the oration at the ceremony commemorating the hundred years of peace between the United States and Great Britain, will give the address. He will speak and show pictures of American war cemeteries in Flanders. The public is welcome.

The Rev. Leland Hobart Danforth, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Lake Forest, will be the special speaker for the morning services of the Cathedral Shelter, Washington boulevard and Peoria street.

Episcopalians Plan Student Center Here

ANNOUNCEMENT of plans for the establishment in Chicago of a national conference and student center of the Episcopal church has been made by the Most Rev. James De Wolf Perry, presiding bishop in America. As the first step toward the founding of the new center, Bishop Perry announced the purchase by the national Episcopal council of property located at 5540 Woodlawn avenue.

The property will be used as headquarters for college work of the Episcopal church, it was stated, as well as a center for general church conferences and gatherings. The building is a three story brick structure which formerly was the residence of Dr. E. Fletcher Ingalls and more recently has served as the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity house. It contains fourteen rooms and is said to be well adapted for conference purposes. The price paid for the building is understood to be approximately $50,000.

Bishop Perry also annbunced that Mrs. George Biller, widow of the late Bishop Biller, will have charge of the center. Mrs. Biller attained wide reputation for development of oriental student conferences at Taylor hall, Racine, Wis. These conferences are held each year, during early September and again at Christmas time. They will be transferred to the new conference center here. The aim of the gatherings is the development of a larger feeling of friendliness and good will betw en orientals and also between orientals and occidentals.

The new conference center here will be the seat of work among students of midwestern colleges and universities and among young people of this section. It is intended as a place where students and young people can come together for discussion and consideration of common problems.

Establishment of the center here is made possible in part by a pledge of $45,000 for the work by the woman's auxiliary of the Episcopal church, according to Bishop Perry's announcement.

Mustapha Kemal Serves Turkey Another Reform

Orders Acceptance of Two-Party Politics.

ANGORA, Turkey.—(AP)—"Brrrrrting-a-ling," goes the Kemalist alarm clock, and Turkey tumbles out of bed to breakfast on another reform.

The reform this time is the westernization of Turkish politics, a jump from one-man, one-party dictatorship, to a two-party system and freedom of speech and of press. It is a pretty big dish to swallow early in the morning, but careful Mustapha Kemal, president of the republic, is on hand with Fletcherizing instructions.

By creating his own opposition instead of allowing it to be created against him, the Ghazi took care that the nation should not choke over its first meal of political liberty. He was cautious, too, in the choice of an opposition leader, the accomplished but not too strong Fethi Bey, whose five years in Paris as Turkish ambassador gave him a good idea of plural party politics.

Good Form Missing.

Despite such precautions, the Turkish nation is not breakfasting in perfect good form. Hot headed Smyrna took up arms against opponents of Fethi Bey when he made his first appearance there, proving to an alarmed Angora that here were people too starving for liberty to munch upon a morsel of it daintily.

In Adana and other parts of Anatolia, pinched peasants interpreted Fethi Bey's promise that taxes would be lowered, as a promise that they would be abolished, and refused to pay when Angora's tax collectors appeared.

Istanbul's university students campaigned wildly for Fethi Bey's liberal party in the municipal elections, at the same time loudly publishing their opinion that the opposition party wasn't worth two cents but should be campaigned for merely to hit back at the party of Ismet Pasha for its dictatorial sway of the last seven years.

More serious examples of bad table manners came from isolated sections of Asia Minor. In Menemen the population took its fezzes out of their hiding places. Liberty to them meant liberty to wear what headgear they pleased. At Balikesser, citizens were caught sweeping the dust of four years from the tekkes, the haunts of the dervishes whose fanatical monastic orders were abolished by Kemal. At Akhissar, on one lonely pole, the green flag of the sultan-caliphs was hoisted by unseen hands.

Kemal's two party experiment began to look dangerous. Immediately Fethi Bey published a declaration that his party had the same secular and republican heart as the party of Kemal and Ismet Pasha. Moslem fanatics, priests, dervishes, and sheiks striving to regain their lost power, were warned not to hold on to Fethi's coat tails.

Squelches Radicals.

The opposition leader also squelched the ultra radicals by publishing a program essentially identical to that of Ismet Pasha, upholding his railroad policy and his refusal to pay the Ottoman debt. Fethi's promise to reduce taxes lost its thrill when Ismet told parliament that that was exactly what he was going to see to himself within the coming year.

In numbers as well as in program, the new opposition party lost its first fine careless rapture. Instead of the seventy seats which, prior to the Smyrna riot, it was rumored would be alloted to the Liberals, only twelve deputies, including Fethi Bey, actually formed the Left of the Angora parliament.

However, the formation of an opposition has had one great result: it has proved to the People's party that its seven years of dictatorship had fooled it into believing that it was absolutely strong.

New Regime at Hand.

Ismet Pasha remains premier, but the nation's reaction to the lifting of his party's dictatorship has shown him that he must tune his policies to the public's wants, and that the Turkish people will no longer nurse those wants in silence.

Taxes must come down. Government corruption must be fought. The son of the baker and butcher must have the same chance to procure scholarships in government schools as the sons of deputies. Ismet's new minister of education must see to that. Turkey's law courts must be made to function more speedily and more equitably. Ismet's new minister of justice had better see to that.

If progress is made in these realms during the next year, then it will be proved that the present commotion is not an infantile colic, but real indigestion of Turkey's political adolescence, giving promise that Kemal's young republic is coming of age.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS

"Square Deal" Rules Mexicans for the Present

MEXICO CITY.—(AP)—All men were not created equal, in the opinion of Pascual Ortiz Rubio, descendant of ancient Tarascan nobility and president of Mexico, but every man should have opportunity to develop that of which he is capable and therein lies the obligation of the wealthy toward the poor.

Chapultepec castle philosophy has undergone considerable change during the twenty years since Porfirio Diaz maintained an iron control over the castle's heavy stone walls. It has passed through its "pink" era and come out of chaotic periods to rest in the hands of a serene, deliberate thinker.

Quite the contrary of the picturesque, dashing military leaders and the radical reformers who at various times preceded him in Mexico's epoch of armed upheavals and legislative turnovers, Ortiz Rubio is the staid, retiring type.

He believes all that is necessary has been accomplished in the way of radical measures. Consolidation and development are the bywords of his administration, which he means to make a matter-of-fact, pegaway stage in the nation's progress toward unquestioned stability.

Practical, Perspective.

His ideas in regard to relationship of men are typical of his views on important subjects in general. What has become known as a practical perspective holds away now in the former home of Maximilian, under the guidance of a man whose forefathers ruled a great part of the country prior to the Spanish conquest.

The president sees in road construction, religious freedom, international harmony, extension of educational facilities and encouragement of orderly, unhampered political opinion some of the prime goals of his government.

Due to rivalry of "caudillos" or military leaders and their influence over politics, it was not until the end of the presidential period of Gen. Plutarco E. Calles, in 1928, that serious thought could be given to creation of peaceful partisan politics.

Calles sounded what the people hoped was the death knell of "caudillismo" when he refused to run for a second term in office. The National Revolutionary party, a civilian political organization built up by Calles, carried Ortiz Rubio, a retired soldier, into the presidency.

Encourages Others.

The president seldom appears in uniform—he prefers to be a civilian, and while he frankly states his affection for the party which elected him he recently declared to congress that the time has come to encourage other civilian political organizations. Peaceful and impartial democratic decision of national affairs is his hope for the future.

Popular opinion sees in the president a democratic but dignified executive, of conservative tendencies, compared with some of his predecessors, but keeping in constant touch with the common people. A recent dinner in Chapultepec castle, at which one common soldier from each of the regiments stationed in the capital was his guest, was an example of the way in which he maintains his contacts.

Italians Use New Process to Change Wine Loss to Cash

MODENA, Italy.—(AP)—Astonishing results have attended a new process to reduce grape pulp remaining after wine making to useful by-products. A factory with a capacity of 10,000 hundredweight of pulp annually has been built here in consequence, with the support of the Fascist National Confederation of Agriculture.

Among the products are alcohol, tartaric acid, cream of tartar, tannic acid, oil, and even fuel bricks.

Using the compressed dried pulp as fuel, the factory gets up steam in its boilers and creates its own electric power.

Thus far the factory has netted 42 cents from each hundredweight of pulp. There are 5,000,000 hundredweight which annually go to waste in Italy.

Colonial Artists Win Commissions for Paris Exhibit

PARIS.—(AP)—French official painters have become so inefficient that native artists have won in open contests several commissions for decorating the picturesque palaces being constructed in the Bois de Vincennes as part of the International Overseas exposition to be held next year.

The works were submitted anonymously to a French jury and adjudged of superior merit.

Romanan Romanankanmonjy of Antananariva has been commissioned by the Madagascar authorities to provide sketches and paintings for the exhibit of "the Great Island."

Ng-v-Thinh and Bui van Dung, two Annamite artists, have been chosen to furnish dioramas illustrating native life in Indo-China. Their work will be seen in the reproduction of the temple of Angkor-Vat on the shores of Lake Dumesnil.

My Funniest Experience

Did you ever have a funny experience that makes you smile whenever you recall it? If you did and care to pass it along, write to Funniest Experience Editor, Chicago Sunday Tribune.

Hooked.

My funniest experience was on a cold winter's day in Providence. A dapper, studious looking man had under his arm a green baize bag, probably full of books. The bag had a drawing tape and the green tape loops swung over his arm. I was waiting for a trolley car. It heaved into view. I put down my umbrella, which had a hooked handle. The hook caught in the dangling green loops of the bag. As I stepped briskly off the curb to the trolley, the man was yanked from the curb. His feet went from under him and he slid into the icy street. This should have been an embarrassing moment but it struck me too funny to embarrass me. E. Z.

Persians Loan Art Treasures to Londoners

LONDON.—(AP)—Valued at millions of dollars, the cream of ancient Persian craftsmanship arrived here in a tramp steamer, whose Negro crew thought she carried dates.

Loaned by the Shah of Persia to the Royal academy for an international exhibition of Persian art, the treasure was under constant guard from the moment it was started toward the ship in Peoria until it was locked up in strongrooms here.

The exhibition opens Jan. 7 and will continue two months.

To defeat efforts of Persian bandits, three huge airplanes made several trips from Teheran to Abadan, flying their precious cargo to deep water and the ship which would bring it here.

Rival Aladdins.

Even the name of the ship, the Baharistan, a 5,000 ton tramp steamer, was guarded in secrecy to minimize danger of pirates, and none, save the captain, knew the value of her cargo.

The treasures rival in splendor those of Aladdin's cave. There are specimens of Persian art ranging from about 200 B. C. down to modern times. They include silken carpets woven in silver and gold, bronzes encrusted with gems, sacred manuscripts and pictures.

At an hour when the streets are comparatively deserted, these Arabian Nights treasures were taken secretly through London, under police escort, to Burlington house.

Precious Embroideries.

Few Europeans have ever gazed on such treasures. There are carpets more precious than a Raphael or a Rembrandt. There are embroideries, imperishable in their loveliness, which were made to veil the beauties of medieval harems.

There is a set of silver vessels in rich filigree out of which it is said that the great caliph, Harun-al-Rashid of Bagdad, caroused.

Unicorn Really Lived, China Scientist Says

PEIPING.—(AP)—Chinese scientists believe they have solved the problem of the unicorn.

The fabulous animal actually existed, in the opinion of oriental archaeologists.

Dr. Li Chi, Harvard graduate, is the man principally responsible for this opinion. In ancient ruins he found a carving that strangely resembled the one-horned bull.

The characters were found to mean that the animal represented by the carving had been captured by hunters. The carving was apparently more than 3,000 years old.

Best Remedy for Cough Is Easily Mixed at Home

You'll never know how quickly a stubborn cough or chest cold can be conquered, until you try this famous recipe. It is used in millions of homes because it gives more prompt, positive relief than anything else. It's no trouble at all to mix and costs but a trifle.

Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey to make a full pint. This saves two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough medicine, and gives you a purer, better remedy. It never spoils, and tastes good—children like it.

You can actually feel its penetrating, soothing action on the inflamed throat membranes. It is also absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes. At the same time, it promptly loosens the germ-laden phlegm. This three-fold action explains why it brings such quick relief even in severe bronchial coughs which follow cold epidemics.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form, and known as one of the greatest healing agents for severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

What IS THE VIENNA YOUTH MASK?

There is no secret about it, the truth itself is so impressive. The Vienna Youth Mask stimulates the circulation, producing health as Nature herself does, through a constantly renewed blood supply. The amazing value of this treatment lies in the depth to which it penetrates, causing the blood to flow in a rich purifying stream to underlying tissues and muscles . . . charging them with new youth and vigor. Concentrated on the face and neck, it is as though electric energy were poured into your very veins. Fresh blood flushes the surfaces, carrying away impurities. The skin is cleared and brightened. Best of all, there comes an exuberant, glad-to-be-alive feeling, a freedom from fatigue that is the true measure of health. In its new "differential" form the Vienna Mask has a flexibility which makes it possible to focus treatment on one's weakest spots . . . the lines at the side of the mouth, puckery places under the eyes, sagging contours. It is as though the finger of youth touched, and revived, every spot threatened by age. But you must see for yourself. Visit Miss Arden's Salons and talk to the trained Diathermic Nurse whose whole time is devoted to work with the Mask. She will tell you in detail exactly what it has done for others . . . and what it can do for you.

Philharmonic Gets a Change of Conductors

Toscanini Returns as Kleiber Leaves.

By Joan King.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—[Special.]—Soon, that event to which New York's music loving public now looks forward, with freely anticipation, each year, will take place—the return of Arturo Toscanini to the baton of the New York Philharmonic orchestra. The beloved baton is even now on his way across the big pond, for Sunday Erich Kleiber will bid his many new friends farewell, to return to Berlin and his duties as director of the State opera there.

For his final week—the sixth of the new season—Mr. Kleiber lived up to his reputation as protagonist of the modern and the novel. He offered the first American performance of Krenek's "Little Symphony," the first performances of Schubert's third symphony and of Mozart's "Four German Dances," by the Philharmonic, and Richard Wagner's youthful overture, "Christopher Columbus," also played for the first time by the orchestra.

Ernst Krenek, best known as the composer of "Johnny Spielt Auf," is a prolific writer, having operas, symphonies, concertos, choruses, chamber music, songs and piano pieces to his credit. His little symphony, Opus 58, was composed in May and June of 1923 and published the following year. It is comprised of three movements: Introduction: Andante sostenuto; Allegro energico; Andantino and Allegretto.

Employs Sonata Form.

According to the composer "the little symphony" makes use throughout of the traditional sonata form. An attempt is made in the first movement to treat A and A flat to some extent as basic tonalities of equal importance. The second movement is a simple, three part song form and the finale, a concise rondo with two or three subsidiary themes which unfold in two almost symmetrical parallel parts. The last, like the closing section of the first is tinged with the characteristics of the modern dance. The tango plays a rôle no more nor less important than the minuet in the classical symphony.

For those who are avid followers of Wagner, the "Christopher Columbus" performance was of particular import. This work was composed in 1835 for a drama by Theodor Apel. The overture waited over seventy years for a New York hearing, reaching Carnegie hall, Feb. 22, 1908, in a Wagner program given by Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony. The composer was only 22 when he wrote the overture. It is interesting in its illustration of the musical influence affecting the young Wagner, though hardly figuring as one of the masterpieces of the early nineteenth century.

Paderewski in Recital.

Orchestra hall has been entertaining the world's noblemen in the art of pianoforte playing during the last few days. The first to fill the old hall to overflowing was the great Paderewski, in his initial appearance, in this town, for two years. The 70 year old pianist and statesman was welcomed, as always, by a rising audience when he arrived on the half dark stage and a burst of applause which lasted several minutes and was halted only by the lighting of the program.

As usual Mr. Paderewski was generous, giving a program comprising Bach-Busoni variations on a theme by Handel; Beethoven's, D minor Sonata, Opus op. 31; Chopin's B minor Sonata; a Chopin Nocturne, Debussy's "Dancing Virgins at Delphia"; "Veils," "The Wind in the Plains," and "Minstrels"; Rachmaninoff's C-sharp minor work, known as "The Prelude," and his G-sharp minor Prelude; Ernest Schelling's transcription of the Prelude to "Tristan Und Isolde" and Liszt's transcription of Paganini's "La Campanella." There were, of course, many encores demanded. In all, Mr. Paderewski played more than two hours and a half, making his usual impression which does not change with his added years, for the sincerity and exactness of his interpretations.

New Dance Season.

A new dance season has been successfully launched here. Of course, the incomparable La Argentina did make her first American bow of the fall several weeks ago but her graceful footsteps were not immediately followed, and it was not until the present week that the new year rally got into its official swing.

Kreutzberg and Georgi returned to the town Sunday, as did the Duncan dancers. The former gave a long program of new and as always, strictly original numbers. Grace, eloquence, agility, beauty of line, costumes of rare color combination—all these held the audience spellbound. This extraordinary art of Harold Kreutzberg and his partner seems constantly to present new brilliance. Indeed, it may be adjudged with little fear of contradiction that Mr. Kreutzberg is the greatest male dancer of this present renaissance of dancing.

The Duncans came back to Carnegie in their first program of the season.

Sheep Acquitted by Belgian Judge in Homicide Case

VERVIERS, Belgium. — (AP) — A sheep, brought to trial here for manslaughter under an old statute making animals as responsible of crimes as human beings, was discharged by the judge on the ground that the sheep-lost its temper after being annoyed by a 4 year old boy.

In the village of Montzen, near here, the sheep driven to frenzy by young boys teasing him, butted one of them into the river and the child drowned.

In pronouncing acquittal the judge recalled that an ass, after being sentenced to death by a French judge in 1750, was later pardoned because of its previous "good character."

U. S. Considers Plan for Year of 13 Months

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[U. P.]—With the recent announcement from Geneva that an international conference on calendar reform will be held in October, 1931, consideration of what changes may be made in the present calendar is being undertaken by the national committee on calendar simplification.

Upon invitation from the league of nations this committee was established in 1928 with the sanction of the state department. Its findings were transmitted to the league by Secretary Stimson in 1929.

Now that plans for the international conference have been definitely formulated, it is expected the official invitation to the United States to participate will be received soon after the meeting of the league council in January.

Out of several hundred plans introduced for construction of a new calendar, they have been narrowed down to two groups of proposals for a fixed perpetual calendar.

One group consists of those plans providing for division of the year into 13 months, each with four weeks. The other is made up of the so-called equal quarters schemes which retain the present number of months, merely changing the days in some of them so as to equalize the quarters of the year.

In the United States it is believed the 13 month proposal would be the better of the two. The seven day week would be retained in this proposal and all defects in the present calendar, in so far as astronomical facts permit, would be eliminated.

Already a number of European countries, as well as the United States, have put the 13 month calendar into effect, using it as an auxiliary calendar.

Wreck Inn Noted for Proximity to London Hangings

LONDON.—(AP)—Halls which once resounded to the shrieks of the condemned are crumbling under wreckers' sledges here.

Work of razing the King of Denmark inn, one of the country's most famous hostelries, is well under way, preparatory to erecting a modern hotel and even the famous old "Dutch kitchen" is not to be spared.

In years gone by the inn was known as the "Magpie and the Stump." Its proximity to Newgate jail and the hangman's scaffold in the time of public executions brought it much custom.

At such times places at the front windows were in great demand. Young blades of that time leased whole suites in the front of the house and invited guests to see the hangings.

Guests of the inn had places of vantage at the last public execution in England, that of Michael Barrett, hanged May 26, 1868, for attempting to blow up the old Clerkenwell prison. Years before this, Phoebe Harris, 30, was burned at the stake in front of the inn for counterfeiting.

Passion Players Divide $500,000 as Drama Profit

OBERAMMERGAU. — (AP) — With gross receipts of about $1,250,000, this year's Passion Play showed net profits of about $500,000. This sum has been divided among 1,150 persons.

Leading actors in the play drew about $250 each and other helpers smaller sums, ranging down to $10 or $15 for each of the 300 youngsters with "walking on" parts. The play had 102 speaking parts.

The remuneration covered 79 performances and months of rehearsals; the musical part alone was rehearsed about 300 times prior to the first performance.

Old Jacob Rutz, Anton Lang's father-in-law, was the patriarch of the play. He has never missed a part in it since he was a child in 1850.

The soul-gripping appeal of the age-old story has not waned. Women—and men, too—wept freely at times and no fewer than 2,000 persons fainted or became hysterical as the great stirring drama of Christianity unfolded itself to the eye. Those who were thus overcome by emotion were taken care of by a staff of nurses.

In 1934 it will be 300 years since the Passion Play was first performed. The villagers favor commemorating the event by a religious celebration only.

SHANGHAI.—(AP)—Dilution of wood oil exports is reported by consular authorities as one reason why the Chinese makers of this commodity cannot compete with foreign products at Singapore.

Illinois Girl Made Happy

MANY times a child has everything to make her happy and still is dissatisfied. This may not be the youngster's fault. Often it is due to a condition mother can easily correct.

Take the experience of Mrs. T. V. Frankquist, 4619 N. Keating Ave., Chicago, who says: "Nothing seemed to please Betty Jane. She was fretful, feverish, suffered a lot from colds. She was constipated.

"We saw California Fig Syrup advertised and got some. It relieved her trouble promptly; made her bright and happy again. We have used it for two years now for all Betty Jane's upsets, and heartily recommend it to all parents."

Mothers by thousands praise this pure vegetable product. Children love its rich, fruity flavor. Doctors recommend its gentle aid to relieve constipation, feverishness, fretfulness, headaches; to open the bowels in colds or children's ailments.

Appetite is increased by the use of California Fig Syrup; breath is sweetened; coated tongue is cleared; digestion and assimilation are aided. Weak bowels and stomach are strengthened. It helps listless, weak children to become strong and energetic again.

Illinois Will Honor Twelve Great Editors

URBANA, Ill.—[U. P.]—Twelve great newspaper editors, who have left their mark in Illinois, national or world journalism, will be honored by unveiling bronze busts of each at the dedication of the University of Illinois' hall of journalism fame here Nov. 21.

Among them are the founders of the two great press associations—E. W. Scripps, who established the United Press associations, and Melville E. Stone, founder of the Associated Press. Scripps was born at Rushville and Stone at Bloomington.

Both men were newspaper editors as well as pioneers in establishment of news services, Scripps having founded the Scripps-McRae league of newspapers now the Scripps-Howard newspapers, and the Newspaper Enterprise association.

Victor Lawson, of Chicago Daily News, and Joseph Medill, famous editor of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, also will be honored at the unveiling.

Medill was the pioneer editor of THE TRIBUNE, and Lawson directed the fortunes of the News during a great period of that paper's life.

Other prominent editors to be honored are Elijah Parrish Lovejoy, martyr and anti-slavery editor of the Alton Observer, who was shot to death as he sought to protect the press from pro-slavery followers, and William Osborne Davis, for 40 years editor of the Bloomington Pantagraph, recognized as being among the foremost smaller city dailies of the country.

Three country weekly editors also are to be given journalistic recognition.

They are John W. Bailey of the Bureau County Republican, who laid the foundation for the largest weekly paper in the world; John W. Clinton, editor of the Polo Press, who led that paper to high distinction; and David Wright Barkley, who made the Wayne County Press the model weekly of southern Illinois.

Besides Davis, three other editors outside of Chicago who will be honored at the unveiling and dedication are Simeon Francis, editor of the Springfield Illinois State Journal during the life of Abraham Lincoln; Henry Clendennin, editor of the Springfield, Illinois, State Register, and Henry M. Pindell, former American diplomat and editor of the Peoria Transcript.

Germans Send War Skull Trophy Back to Africa

BERLIN.—(AP)—After 11 years of search the skull of the Negro sultan, Mkwawa, has been found in a Berlin museum. It will be handed to the British administration of East Africa as provided in article 246 of the treaty of Versailles.

Early in the world war German troops in East Africa carried off the skull as a war trophy and sent it to Berlin. At Versailles an African delegation demanded its return.

In all departments, the equipment lacks nothing that can contribute to the convenience of guests. Each guest room is outside, with bath, circulating ice water, bed-head reading lamp, telephone and Servidor. A housekeeper is assigned to each floor, and excellent garage accommodations are available.
